Local finds 40-year tradition in Education Week

By Melanie Williams
melanie@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Laura Nelle Bendixsen has gone to Education Week every year for almost half her life.

She will go to Education Week again this year, but she will not hear the speakers as clearly or get from class to class as easily as when she first attended 40 years ago.

Bendixsen said the first time she went to Education Week was in 1961 when her husband, the late Grant D. Bendixsen, was serving as a bishop.

She said the first class she attended was on Family Home Evening, and she decided she wanted to come to Education Week every year.

"We went to that class, and I told my husband, 'I don't ever want to have to miss this again,'" Bendixsen said.

Sanoma Burke, Bendixsen's daughter, said her mother even had an opportunity to teach at Education Week one year about Family Home Evening.

"She always liked to go and get ideas on families and what to do to keep the kids busy and entertained," Burke said.

Although the classes about families are her favorites, Bendixsen said she enjoys all of them.

"It's just a shame you can't stretch out and go to five of them at one time," she said.

When Bendixsen first attended Education Week she had eight children and was living in Edgemont in Provo, said Joy Harris, Bendixsen's niece.

Bendixsen's older children helped to take care of her younger children so she could attend Education Week, Burke said.

"We knew that was the week that we had to stay home and take care of the kids," Burke said.

Later, when Bendixsen's family was going to be moving to Ogden, Weber County, her husband told her she would always be able to come back for Education Week, Bendixsen said. Bendixsen said it was then she was willing to move to Ogden.

"It's just a shame that a lot of people who even live right in the area, I don't suppose, have ever been to it or even know about it or what it is," Bendixsen said about Education Week.

Burke said Bendixsen's health has gotten worse over the last two years.

"She can't get around as well as she used to so she doesn't get to as many classes as she used to do when we were younger, but she still goes to Education Week and loves it," Burke said.

Last year, because she had a difficult time walking from class to class and hearing the speakers, Bendixsen said she attended only one class.

"I go down and sit in the cafeteria now and watch the people and see if somebody comes by that I've known or met while I've been down there," she said. "I meet a lot of new people that way — a lot of them come up and start a conversation with me."

Burke said it has always been apparent where her mother will be during Education Week.

"I do know that it didn't matter what was going on; we were told, when I was a child that we better not plan our weddings during Education Week because then she wouldn't be coming to our wedding," she said.

Residents fight for Franciscan Church

By Robin Tanner

The lights were dim and the pews pushed back to create a theater with street graffiti for a backdrop.

While the "Jets" and the "Sharks" rumbled on stage, behind the scenes another fight continues to take place.

That fight is to save the historical Franciscan church. Franciscan Monks originally built the church in the early 1900s.

Christian Disciples International must raise $200,000 as a down payment to purchase the building.

"We're trying to save the building because of its historical value but then have it be a community place," Ronda Stemmons said.

The production of West Side Story was just one way The Franciscan is seeking donations.

Stemmons helped in another way as she sat behind a table selling treats at intermission.

"My family was involved in a previous production and The Franciscan just kind of got to our heart."

Stemmons was instrumental in finding one of the cast members. 14-year-old Eric Wendt from Orem played the "Jet" named Arad.

"My favorite part was the dancing—and Maria," Wendt said.

Afterwards Wendt and other cast members enthusiastically shook the hands of the audience.

"I also liked hanging out with my friends," Wendt said.

Making friends within the community is at the center of what art department director Pam Lockwood wants to have happen.

"We feel like The Franciscan is actually a melting pot where we can celebrate our sameness instead of disagreeing."

The performing group's cast was made up of youth from several different faiths.

"We try to create an atmosphere where a lot a different religions and cultures can associate."

Lockwood said she didn't realize how many people in the area are not members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"Almost 50 percent of the people we deal with on a daily basis here are Hispanic and catholic," Lockwood said.

The art program is just one aspect the Franciscan offers the community. There are also ESL and literacy classes. On Sundays several non-denominational churches meet.

Debbie Wendt volunteers at The Franciscan beautifying the land and planting flowers. She was excited to see her son's newfound talents on stage.

"It's good for him. My son is a really good kid and it's a good missionary effort for him," Wendt said.

She and her son are the only members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in their family.

"The important part is that the kids are learning their own abilities, broadening their horizons and making new friends," Wendt said.

Lockwood said that in the Provo community there is a lot of talk about love, but there is a lack of actually knowing how to love each other.

"Our biggest challenge is getting that pure love of Christ into our hearts and loving anybody whatever they believe," Lockwood said.

Debbie Wendt agreed that it is important for the youth to come together and to get to know each other for who they are.

"What matters is they are doing things together," Wendt said.

Woman under investigation, charged with intent to harm Pres. Bateman

By Sharon Ugolini

A woman accused of authoring a threatening letter to BYU President Merrill J. Bateman is under federal indictment.

Wednesday a federal grand jury began to review the allegations that Lavanya Paul, 28, a native of India living in Provo, tried to extort $1 million from BYU.

According to the indictment, the letter contained a threat to injure Bateman and "damage or destroy a building or real property by means of fire and explosives."

Paul was charged with extortion and "willfully threatening to kill, injure and intimidate" President Bateman.

The severity of the crime has caused BYU to refer all questions to the U.S. Attorney's office in Salt Lake City.

"We turned it over to the proper authorities," said Michael Smart, BYU spokesman.

"(Paul) has been summoned to appear in federal court sometime next week. She will appear in court and enter her plea," said Melodie Rydalch, U.S. Attorney's public information officer. "This is the beginning of a long process."

"The threats that she made are very serious," Rydalch said.

Paul has not been taken into custody due to further information received by U.S. District Attorney, Paul Warner.

"He felt it wasn't necessary to have her arrested," Rydalch said.

The U.S. Attorney's office said it doesn't believe Paul is a risk at this time.

President Bateman's secretary reviewed the content of the letter when it first reached the office on Aug. 6. Concerned it was a bomb threat she contacted BYU police, said University Police Lt. Greg Barber.

University Police immediately sent an officer to assess the situation.

The officer felt the letter was a threat and informed the FBI, Barber said.

He said the University Police believes BYU campus is safe and students shouldn't be concerned.

BYU has to move forward and allowed the proper authorities to take the necessary precautions, Smart said.

Tulane to open Crowton's career at Y

By Scott Creer

Gary Crowton's era as BYU's head football coach will get an early start.

BYU will play Tulane in the BCA Classic at LaVell Edwards Stadium on Saturday.

"This game will give our team an early test and will give our fans an additional game as we open the college football season," Crowton said.

BYU's season begins with two straight home games. The Cougars will already have played two games, against Tulane and Nevada, before students have even started classes.

The only previous meeting between the BYU and Tulane was the 1998 Liberty Bowl, with the Green Wave winning 41-27. The win completed No. 10 Tulane's undefeated season.

Tulane comes off the 2000 season with a 6-5 record. Tulane's strength still comes from its powerful offense.

Tulane owned Conference USA's top-ranked offense last season led by returning quarterback Patrick Ramsey and running back Mewelde Moore. Ramsey averaged 453 yards a game and Moore was the C-USA Freshman of the Year.

Tulane's heralded offense matches up against the Cougars' talented defense. All-American candidate Justin Ena heads a strong linebacking corps to anchor a defense returning several starters from last year.

Since BYU played Florida State in a preseason game last year, the school had to apply for a special exemption from the NCAA. NCAA rules only allow one preseason game every four years.

"We are excited to receive the NCAA exemption and have the opportunity to host Tulane," Crowton said.

The game begins at 2:30 p.m. and can be seen nationwide on ESPN2. Tickets are still available for the game at (801)-378-BYU1.

Bears roam through Denver suburbs

DENVER — Two bears have waddled through the city's southwest suburbs in two days, the latest in a series of bear encounters in Colorado.

State wildlife officers and Jefferson County sheriff's deputies searched Thursday for a black bear in a Littleton neighborhood. They gave up the hunt when the bear headed toward the foothills a mile west.

Wildlife officers tranquilized a bear Wednesday that had romped through backyards and crawled over fences in Centennial, about 15 miles south of Denver. Officials said the 125-pound bear probably followed bike paths, trails and gulches from the foothills.

A bear and her cubs showed up at a Wendy's fast food restaurant in Trinidad Aug. 6, and a black bear entered the Aspen home of tennis star Chris Evert and former Olympic ski racer Andy Mill last week.

Air bag maker to move operation south

OGDEN, Utah — Automobile air bag maker Autoliv Inc. will transfer a manufacturing operation to Mexico, cutting 460 jobs in Utah during the next year, the company announced Thursday.

Autoliv will move the jobs from its 12th Street plant in Ogden to an existing plant in Queretaro, Mexico, during the next 12 to 14 months, according to a company news release. Pointing to a downturn in the auto industry, Autoliv officials say they plan to cut costs by moving jobs to countries where labor costs less.

After the cut-and-sew employees are gone, about 40 workers will remain in the Ogden plant - jobs in research and development, marketing, prototyping and purchasing.

Some employees may be offered jobs elsewhere in the company. Others will get severance packages, said Roger Tea, vice president of human resources.

Grocery chains pull imported candy

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Two grocery chains pulled a type of imported jelly candy from hundreds of California supermarkets after they were linked to the choking deaths of two children.

Grocery giants Safeway pulled Jelly Yum brand candies from 200 of its Northern California stores last week, and Wednesday another large chain followed suit. Albertson's gel candies were sold under the names Fruit Poppers and Gel-ly Drop.

"We felt we needed to do this immediately in California. We've taken them out of stores and locked them up," Stacia Levenfeld, a spokeswoman for Albertson's, told the San Jose Mercury News. "The FDA has not given us any indication if these are safe or not."

The sweet gel comes in a small plastic cup. The gel does not readily dissolve in the mouth and often come with a fruit chunk in the middle, officials said.

The candy is linked to the deaths of Deven Joncich, 3, of Morgan Hill in November and Michelle Enrile, 12, of San Jose last month. In both cases, rescue workers said they couldn't dislodge the sticky gel from the children's throats.

Toys R Us recalls children's cargo pants

WASHINGTON — Toys R Us is recalling about 7,000 children's cargo pants because plastic toggles on the pockets can break off, posing a choking hazard.

The Kids R Us division of the Paramus, N.J.-based company has received one report of a 9-month-old boy who began to choke on a toggle he removed from the pants, the Consumer Product Safety Commission said Thursday.

The recalled pants are navy, khaki or stone with different color stitching around the pockets. The pants have an elastic waistband and an elastic draw-cord. A label on the rear inside seam reads "Koala Baby" or "Little Legends" and the care label reads "Made in Thailand."

Kids R Us and Babies R Us stores nationwide and some Toys R Us stores sold these pants from June 2001 through July 2001 for about $10. The pants were sold in both newborn and infant sizes.

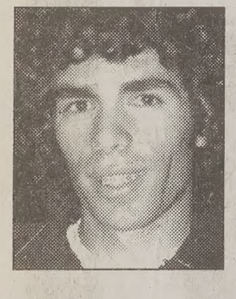
Scripture of the Day



"Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life."

— 2 Nephi 31:20

Mark Willard, 22, from Orem, likes this scripture because "it has everything we need to do to return to Heavenly Father in that one verse."

"It's hard to say because we can complete the list that we have now and request another inspection by the city, and they can come and pass everything off. But they might find something else and say, 'well, now we need to fix this,'" Backman said.

Nelson said although there has been a delay in the opening, the library has met all of its commitments.

Four wedding receptions were held at the library last week and the ballroom, kitchen and part of the second floor were completed in time for the reception, he said.

"Everybody pushed in and got the parts open that we needed," Nelson said.

"We would be ready to open tomorrow. Except for there's a lot of little details that need to be worked out with the building," said Carla Morris, head of the Provo library children's department.

September 8th is the grand opening of the library, Nelson said. Library services should begin about two weeks prior to that.

A criminal background check revealed that Gronau had a 1991 drug arrest. The trooper blocked Gronau's car into a parking spot and accused him of hauling drugs even though the only evidence of that was the 1991 arrest.

Gronau refused to let the officer search the rental car and went inside the restaurant with his son.

Meantime, the trooper summoned a drug-sniffing dog, which caught a whiff of something inside the trunk.

When Gronau left the restaurant, the trooper said he was seizing the car but that Gronau was free to go.

Authorities towed the car away, got a search warrant and found the drugs in a duffel bag inside the trunk.

The blocked-in car was at the heart of the Fourth Amendment ruling.

Appeals Court Judges William Thorne and Norman Jackson said that because Gronau was not personally detained, and because he voluntarily left the car unattended while eating breakfast, his rights were not violated.

Judge Gregory Orem dissented.

The trooper's continued surveillance of Gronau after the traffic stop, his blocking the vehicle and his call for the drug-sniffing dog sent a clear signal that Gronau was not free to take the vehicle and leave, Orem wrote.

It might not seem like a big deal that BYU student David Stephenson is 18, unless you know he is a senior.

Stephenson, who is from Phoenix and majoring in chemical engineering, came to BYU when he was 16. He said it didn't seem weird at all to come to BYU at the early age.

"It was natural actually," Stephenson said.

Stephenson's two older brothers also came to BYU early. His oldest brother came at 16, and his other brother came at 17.

But getting to college early wasn't Stephenson's only goal. He is planning to graduate in April. To do it, he is taking 21 credits in the fall. But, he said he will only take 17 in the winter.

"I'm taking it easy my last semester," he said.

Stephenson said people usually realize he is young, because he looks it, but, as far as he knows, nobody ever had a problem with his age.

"I guess it surprises people," he said, "but it's your own education."

He said he doesn't feel like he has to worry about people watching him. He just does what he wants to do for his education.

Greg Wrubell, "the voice of the Cougars" on KSL radio, started classes at BYU at 16. He entered the broadcast journalism program and was on air at 17.

Wrubell said he was "the kid in the newsroom." People wanted to see what he could do.

"When you're younger, people expect more of you because you've gotten to that level because of something special, they would assume. They want to see what's special about you," he said.

"So there's a little bit of pressure to maybe not just keep up, but maybe even exceed expectations, just to prove that you belong," Wrubell said.

But Wrubell said that was never a problem for him.

"I used it as motivation," he said. "I never felt like I was failing to meet those expectations."

Wrubell skipped first grade, so he said he was used to being the short, young guy in class. Being younger in college was not a big deal. Now, at 33, Wrubell said there is no longer anything unusual about his age.

Wrubell said if he had to decide again, he still would have come to college at an early age.

"I was excited to just get going," he said.

Wrubell said getting started in broadcast at a young age was beneficial to him.

"I got so much experience at a young age, so that when I came out of school I was ready to work at KSL," he said.

Daniel Witte also liked getting experience young. He started attending BYU at 15. Witte graduated from BYU before his mission. He then went to law school at BYU on a scholarship.

"It gives you more time to go out there and do things," Witte said.

Graduating from law school at 25, Witte said he was able to take some jobs he probably would not have taken had he been older. He also had time to do a service project in Guatemala, he said.

Getting a job at a young age was not a problem for Witte.

"It's your skills that matter," he said.

Witte said the only place he had difficulty with his age was in law school. He said it was hard to get elected by his peers to directorial positions in student organizations, which were important for his resume.

"Nobody wants to be directed by somebody five years younger than him," he said.

Witte said he was able to get through school at such an early age because of a combination of resources, parental support, and some self-initiative.

BYU senior Ari Bruening is one of 13 perfect people in the nation this year — perfect as far as the Law School Admissions Test goes.

Bruening, 22, a philosophy major from West Valley City received a perfect score on his LSAT administered in June.

His reaction to receiving his score was relief.

"I was really nervous to find out what my score was," Bruening said.

Bruening had taken eight practice tests but no prep course in preparing for the test.

He also credits his philosophy courses for helping with the test's logic and reasoning section.

"I knew he would do well no matter what," Diana Bruening, Ari's wife, said.

While taking the exam, Bruening felt like he would receive just short of 180, the highest possible test score.

"I knew he could do it, but I just didn't want to get my hopes up," Diana Bruening said.

This is not the first time he has received a perfect test score nor is he the only person in his family to get a perfect score on an exam.

Bruening aced the ACT exam, his sister got a perfect score on the SAT, and his brother also got a perfect score on the ACT.

Bruening was one of 23,908 people who took the LSAT in June.

His perfect score puts him in the top 99.9 percentile, said Ed Haggerty, spokesman for the Law School Admissions Council.

The test is administered four times a year, and June usuall the largest number of test- ta Haggerty said.

Last year, 27 people rece perfect LSAT scores of the administrations.

Bruening's said he advises dents who are preparing to the exam to relax during the

He said he plans to study ronmental law or legal ethi law school. He might even t get his doctorate degree in ph ophy later, he said.

Bruening hopes to go to vard, Yale or Stanford for school.

Bruening said his screamed when she heard news.

"He'll do awesome," D said.

A recent legal victory, noted on the department's web site, was when Casey Martin, a disabled professional golfer, took the PGA Tour to court and won the right to use a golf cart during official competitions.

The PGA Tour appealed the case to the Supreme Court, but lost. Although the ADA has assisted disabled Americans, many disabled individuals and their caretakers think that there is room for improvement.

Lesa Howell, qualified mental retardation professional for the state of Utah, said she has seen some problems at BYU.

Howell, who has two disabled children, said she took the children to a BYU basketball game, but ran into difficulties when all the disability-parking stalls were full.

Howell said she asked a parking attendant if she could stop and take her children in to someone who was waiting to help her, but was told no.

I ended up parking up at the Conference Center and someone offered to push one of the wheelchairs, Howell said.

She said she later found out that individuals could purchase a permit that will insure them a disability-parking stall.

Howell said that this upset her because she would have to pay for something that everyone else got for free.

Another experience Howell had while at BYU was at the Skyroom Restaurant. Howell's children and their provider were kicked out of the restaurant and told that they were offensive to their customers, she said.

She said that on a separate occasion they tried to eat there and were not allowed in for the same reason. She talked to the manager who agreed with the previous decision and said they could not come in.

Howell said she does not blame the university for these problems. I don't think that it is BYU's fault that these things are happening, but the people who work there, she said.

Howell said besides those occasions her children have been treated well while at BYU.

Her children were honored at a basketball game and each child received a basketball and $100, she said.

Other individuals have seen BYU and the surrounding communities in Utah County shine when it comes to the ADA.

Eileen Glather, VISTA volunteer for the Central Utah Center for Independent Living, said "BYU is primarily wheelchair user friendly with a few glitches ... when we complained, they were fixed."

Janet Preston, director of the Utah County Multiple Sclerosis Self Help Group, said her experience with the community has been generally good.

She said that people often hold doors for her and are very helpful.

Exhibits thrive at MOA

By Richard S. Reeve

The Museum of Art continues with art exhibitions through the summer. Two current exhibits, Pastoral Utah and Mormon Moderne, will continue through Saturday and June 15, 2002, respectively.

Pastoral Utah, designed by Brian Bird, displays many pieces from the museum's permanent collection.

"The pieces in the exhibit examine the appeal of pastoral landscapes and landscape painting to Utahans who live in an area of the country that is desert," said Marian Wardle, curator of Pastoral Utah.

When Wardle researched for the exhibit, she found that many reprints of pieces in the exhibit were also hanging in various offices on BYU campus.

The exhibit received a great response when it opened in January.

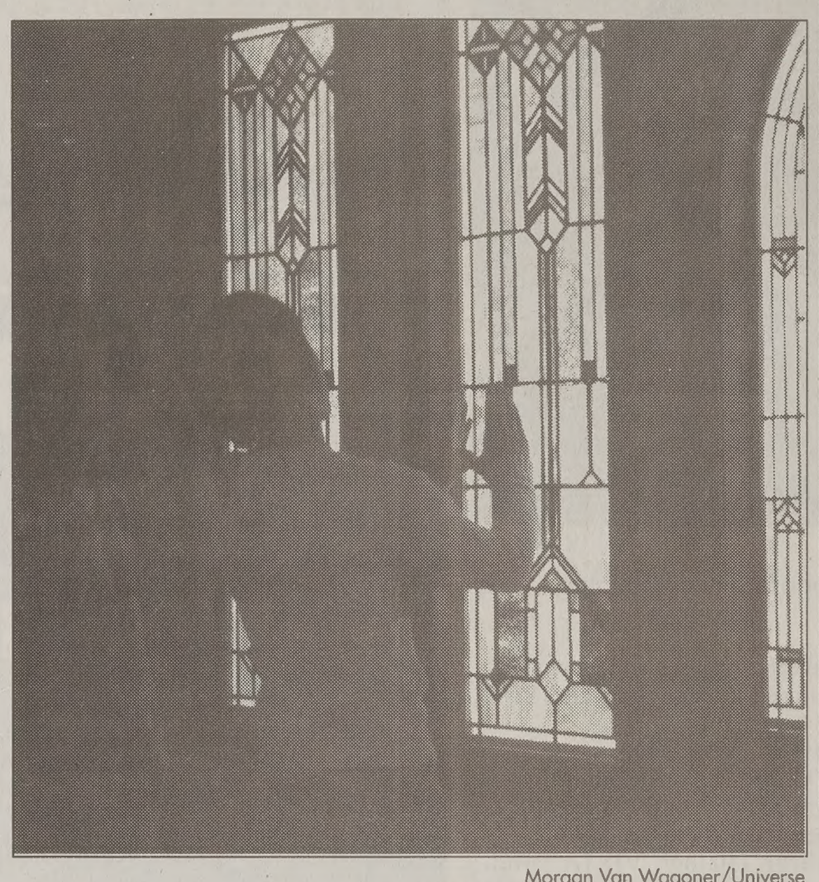
The 26 pieces are all owned by BYU.

As visitors walk through and visit the exhibit, they may recognize the scenes, Wardle said.

Mormon Moderne, designed by curator Paul L. Anderson, opened in March and museum directors planned on closing the exhibit in September.

But due to the large response and the amount of tours and other interstate visitors, the museum decided to extend the exhibit into the spring of 2002.

The exhibit is composed of certain pieces on loan from church archives, features photos, plans, and actual pieces of the buildings that early church members built from the 1890s to the 1950s.



Morgan Van Wagoner/Universe

The Museum of Art opened its Mormon Moderne art exhibit. These stained glass windows are a part of the exhibit.

"It gives viewers ... a different perspective on what the temples display and how uniquely they are designed, fabricated and put together," said Christine Howard, marketing and public relations manager.

One visitor of the exhibit said the exhibit is good for non-Utah residents to visit.

"I think that when people from outside of Utah are coming, it is a good opportunity to learn more about the church—not just our beliefs but our history," said Pabst, 22, a graduate student from Ventura, Calif., pursuing her masters in American studies.

Anderson, designer of Mormon Moderne, considers the focus of the exhibit to be the "most interesting periods in Mormon architecture."

The exhibit has received extensive media coverage including features in the Church News and Salt Lake City newspapers.

Y museum features dinosaur skeleto

BYU's Earth Science Museum has a new exhibit featuring a fully mounted skeleton of Torvosaurus tanneri, a large carnivorous dinosaur.

The 33 foot long skeleton is the first to be displayed in any museum, said Ken Stadtman, museum curator.

According to display information, the Torvosaurus lived about 148 million years ago during the late Jurassic Period.

The Torvosaurus bones were first collected in Colorado in 1972 by BYU paleontologists, according to the display. The skeleton is cast from original fossils belonging to the museum.

Movies like "Jurassic Park 3" and Disney's "Dinosaur" help renew interest in dinosaurs, especially for younger visitors, Stadtman said.

"The kids that come into the museum will use words or names they've heard in the movies," he said. "They're relating the two."

Stadtman said the dinosaur behavior depicted in movies is largely conjecture.

Dinosaur bones and skeletons can help us reconstruct their bodies, but how they acted is still mostly a mystery, he said.

The Torvosaurus display is manent exhibit, and is par collection that includes ic mammals and ancient for sea life.

Professors teach at local schools

By Marissa Pinon
marissa@newsroom.byu.edu

Several BYU professors are increasing their teaching ability by volunteering their time off campus.

The Teacher Education Department requires professors to work three hours a week directly with the public schools, Winston Egan, department chairman, said.

The outside work is a program called Partnering.

"It keeps them current," Egan said. "They have a connection on a regular basis with schools and students."

Teacher Education professor Stephanie Smith has taught math to the same students for the past three years. She began teaching them in the first grade. The instruction will continue until the students are in the sixth grade.

Her project is part of a National Council of Teachers for Mathematics standards program. The program sets standards for research based curriculum and is funded by the National Science Foundation.

For Smith the idea was an additional learning tool for her BYU students.

"I teach with materials as an existence proof for my own students," Smith said.

The college students are given a briefing before they go into the classroom to observe, and afterwards share feedback on their observations.

Smith and her students can use this as a shared reference for teaching children.

"It's an opportunity for the public as well as my own students on campus to come and see what happens when standards based curriculum is being used," Smith said.

Smith recognizes the impact serving has had on her own professional career as well as on BYU.

"What started as an existence proof has broadened into a partnership that BYU has been supporting in the educational setting," she said.

Other professors involved in teaching off-campus are Hugh Baird, Garm Kunz and Parker Fausen.

Baird taught science at Timpview High School this year.

"He didn't miss a beat," said Joyce Aldred, a recently retired Timpview teacher.

"The thing that was so wonderful is that he could relate the subject matter to students much younger than the college age," she said.

Kunz taught social studies at Provo High School.

Fausen taught in public classrooms for a year after receiving his doctorate.

"We feel like we're pioneers," Johnson said. "We've been contacted by several universities who are interested in seeing how it goes and what the reaction is," he said.

The award represents the first time BYU has taken grand prize in any dining recognition from the NACUFS. It is also the first award the Creamery on Ninth has received since it opened on Aug. 24, 2000, Wright said.

Olsen said the award highlights the effort the Creamery on Ninth has made to serve its customers during its first year.

"We have been constantly changing and improving the business and learning how to serve our customers better," Olsen said.

Heritage Halls resident, Gretchen Ottley, a freshman from Wash., majoring in psychology, said she shops at the Creamery on Ninth once or twice a week.

"The Creamery's nice when you forget to get the little things. You can run up real quick and grab them," Ottley said.

Tiffany Cochenour, 18, a freshman from Ore., studying child psychology, said she visits the Creamery on Ninth because it's close to home.

"It's convenient when you're craving something chocolate-y and you don't have a car. You can just walk up the street," she said.

Service-learning classes identified on schedule

By April Karina Fillmore
april@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

BYU is emphasizing the importance of service-learning by offering courses specifically marked as such in the class schedule and on web registration starting Winter Semester 2002.

But some teachers, like Jerry Jaccard, a BYU music professor, have been involving their students in service-learning classes for years.

However, Ronald Bybee, the head of Academic Scheduling, said winter semester is the first time the classes will be identified as service-learning classes on the class schedule and web registration. This will enable students to choose whether or not they want to be involved in a service-learning class.

Professor Jaccard donates 10 hours of service a week as a curriculum consultant and administrator for Wasatch Elementary School, but only expects students to spend about one or two hours a week teaching music at Wasatch Elementary School.

"Looking at the Big Picture we've got a situation where everyone wins," Jaccard said.

The BYU music students are able to have hands-on learning by teaching what they learn in the classroom to students at Wasatch Elementary, he said.

The school systems and elementary school children are able to receive free music education, that due to a lack of funding, they could not receive otherwise, according to Jaccard.

Jaccard said he believes service learning also helps professors to teach in a practical manner instead of being a theoretical teacher.

"It's a fantastic program and they're wonderful to come in and teach our students," said Betty Johnson, Wasatch Elementary School secretary.

She has noticed how professional the BYU students are and how knowledgeable they are about music.

Professor Gary Danes, who teaches American Heritage, has also integrated service-learning into his classroom.

Midway's Swiss Days to feature music, crafts and food

By Brenya Smith
brenya@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

A little piece of Switzerland comes to Midway Aug. 31 and Sept. 1 during the 55th annual Swiss Days Festival.

What started out in 1947 as a musical festival full of dance and games during harvest season has turned into a large craft show with over 229 crafters selling everything from homemade baskets to metal artwork, said Alvah Kohler, advertising director for the festival.

The festival focuses on the Swiss culture and traditions because over 50 percent of Midway's founders were from Switzerland, Kohler said.

Kohler participated in the first Swiss Days, originally called Harvest Days.

"It ended up being a lot of fun between the rodeo and the tug of wars and the greased pig chases and rides. The games were a lot of fun," he said.

In fact, in one way or another, Kohler and his wife Monica have either directed or participated in Swiss Days from the beginning.

"We believe there is something special about the feeling for each other that is kind of slipping away from us in this world. We just feel like it is something we ought to be doing," Kohler said.

Over the years, Harvest Festival transformed itself into Swiss Days, a crafters haven, complete with music, games and food.

Karen Pearson from Heber is selling girls' nightgowns in the festival this year.

"It's just unreal that people do as well as they do. I've been to a lot of craft fairs but nothing like this. It's just huge," Pearson said.

Kohler said people can expect to see Swiss dresses, wood crafts, furniture, homemade china, candles, soap and more.

Over 500 artisans applied to be in the festival. To create a well-rounded festival, a jury selected only 221 of the crafters, Kohler said.

"We don't want too much of one item," he said.

Deanna Gardner from Layton has been attending the festival for the past eight years. She said that every year there is a hot item.

"You watch people and you are like, 'Oh my gosh, look at what that lady has,' and then it's a challenge finding where she got it and hurry up and get there before somebody gets the last one," Gardner said.

The festival is a tradition in her family. Every year all the aunts and sisters gather together and hit the festival.

"We probably each come back with at least 15 things and then we lay them all out at my mom's house and it's just like Christmas morning. It's just so fun," she said.

Kohler said between 60,000 and 80,000 people attend the festival every year.

"We have crafters say this is the best there is," he said.

In addition to the craft booths, Swiss food is available, including Swiss breads, Swiss cookies, sauerkraut, bratwurst and Swiss tacos, he said.

Gardner said another highlight is the music including the Swiss Choir and Mountain Valley Cloggers.

Music is now and has always been a big part of the festival, Kohler said.

"Music became very vital – it's the thing that kept the people going, kept them happy, kept them willing to go on and try to put together life here in the valley," Kohler said.

This year, Kohler said every minute of the festival has music.

Monica Kohler said Swiss Days carries on the traditions of the community.

"The purpose of Swiss Days is to teach our children and the adults the importance of the traditions of our lives and their heritage and how important it is to each of us."

Alvah Kohler participated in last year's Swiss Days. Kohler is a tenor in the Swiss Da Choir. In addition to music, crafts and food will also be available at the festival. Swiss Da begins on Aug. 31in Midway.

er said his association e NFB shortly after col- anged his view of how eople can be an integral part of society and gave him the motivation to look past social stereotypes and help fulfill a portion of the school's needs.

"I learned that it's respectable to be blind," Gardner said. "I finally felt peace deep down inside. When I learned that I had been the beneficiary of devoted blind people my entire life, I realized that I had a debt. It was just the thing to do to try to help this school in Mexico."

In June, Gardner, his wife Maggie and son David, along with Ray and LuWana Martin of the Utah Division of Services for the Blind and Visually Impaired, and Dr. Janice Gygi, chair of marketing and international business at UVSC, made the trip to Villahermosa with supplies to create Braille textbooks.

During their June trip, Gardner and his colleagues delivered two Interpoint embossers, which allow Braille to be punched on both sides of a sheet of paper, to the school. They also took the computer software and supplies necessary to transfer print versions of textbooks into a format suitable to be translated and created in Braille.

In addition, they taught six teachers at the school how to use the equipment.

"This is a great time-saver," Gygi said. "Being able to produce more books will help these children and their families."

One family drove five hours to Villahermosa to obtain other special equipment the group delivered to help their blind son communicate in Braille.

"If you can imagine living in the dark ages, imagine someone coming in and putting in a Kinko's next door — that's kind of how it is for the students," Martin said. "There were blind people thinking their world had ended, but now they're reaching for employment."

Unemployment among blind people is mostly attributed to a lack of literacy, according to the NFB.

Foundation seeks to burst Disney's 'Bubble'

Associated Press

> "I have a hard time understanding why you would make a comedy out of something serious like that."
> — Jennifer Davidson, on tv station WKJG

A foundation for people with immune deficiencies is asking Walt Disney Co. to cancel the release of a movie about a boy who lives in a plastic bubble and planning a boycott of the film, saying it's insensitive.

An Indiana family also is urging people not to see "Bubble Boy," a comedy about a young man who has lived his entire life in a bubble and ventures into the world when he learns his childhood sweetheart is engaged to another man.

The 15,000-member Immune Deficiency Foundation has asked Disney not to release the movie, starring Jake Gyllenhaal and Marley Shelton, on Aug. 24.

The group, based in Towson, Md., says the movie makes fun of people with Severe Combined Immunodeficiency, or SCID.

IDF founder Marcia L. Boyle, whose 23-year-old son has SCID, said in a July 30 letter to Disney Chief Executive Officer Michael Eisner that the movie is a "cheap slap in the face" to children who have the disease or have died from it.

"I'm sure that in the politically correct society in which we live, almost any movie you release raises the hackles of one group or another. There's a part of me that almost feels sympathy for the criticism that you must continuously face over good-natured movies that cause protest," Boyle wrote in the letter, which is posted on the group's Web site. "There is nothing good-natured, however, about THIS movie. It's not only offensive, it's positively horrifying."

Previews for the movie show the boy being run over by a bus and bounced around like a beach ball at a rock concert.

The group contends the movie has similarities to the story of David Philip Vetter, a Texas boy who lived his entire 12-year life inside a plastic enclosure because of a disease that made him susceptible to germs.

Vetter, who died in 1984, is a symbol for children with SCID, the foundation says, and his lifelong isolation linked the nickname "Bubble Boy" with him and the term "Bubble Boy Disease" with SCID.

"Disney says the resemblance to my son is purely coincidental," Vetter's mother, Carol Ann Demaret, said from her home in Houston. "But that can't be true if there was only one 'Bubble Boy' in history. Did they even think about how this might affect those who have to deal with this life-threatening disease?"

Walt Disney Co. spokeswoman Andrea Marzas declined comment Thursday night.

A Fort Wayne, Ind., mother also is urging people to boycott the movie, saying it mocks the disease that killed her two daughters.

"I have a hard time understanding why you would make a comedy out of something serious like that," Jennifer Davidson told Fort Wayne television station WKJG. "They don't make comedies about cancer or AIDS or anything like that."

SCID is one of the best-known of 80 related genetic diseases called primary immunodeficiency, or PI, that weaken the immune system. Children with the diseases are born with faulty immune genes, putting them at risk for unusually repeated infections, sometimes death.

Springville man gives back with theater

High school introvert found voice in acting

By Aaron Bentley, Erin Vandre, and Marie Williams
NewsNet Staff Writers

For Bill Brown of Springville, life has always been busy.

Brown could be called a man of many trades, but it is his devotion to theater in Springville for which he is most recognized.

Brown first discovered his love for theater in high school when he took a speech class thinking it would be an easy credit. Instead it introduced him to theater.

In high school I was an introvert, with a pretty low self-image, Brown said.

"Theater changed my life as a young man."

Brown's first experience in a high school play awarded him Actor of the Year.

"I was on cloud nine," Brown said of the experience. "Theater made me feel important."

These and other high school experiences led Brown to desire the opportunity to teach theater to others.

"I wanted to do for the community what it had done for me in my life."

However, life doesn't always lead us down the path we dreamed for ourselves. After completing high school in 1959, Brown attended BYU to pursue a theater degree. However, while there his major shifted to business and then with 96 credit hours under his belt Brown left college for a full-time job in real estate.

It took 27 years for his love to resurface.

In 1986 Brown was asked to play the lead in "Life of Father." After that experience, Brown said, "I was hooked."

Brown then shocked family and friends when he and his wife Marilyn literally knocked on Springville's movie theater house door and told the owner they wanted to buy it.

The theater was run-down, and in 1996 Brown and his wife Marilyn took a leave of absence from their real estate business to work on the theater full- time.

"We literally rolled up our shirtsleeves and for three and a half months we literally worked our fannies off," Brown said.

Brown's son Kim recalled at the time of this decision he didn't even know his father had such a love for theater.

> "I wanted to do for the community what it had done for me in my life."
> — Bill Brown, Springville resident

"The whole family was shocked, and to me he was a constant business man who only knew real estate," Kim Brown said.

Not long after buying the Springville theater, Brown soon saw the need the community had for a children's theater.

Brown then bought two more buildings to house the "Little Theater".

Today the Little Theater is a non-profit organization, where over 200 children are enrolled in its youth programs.

"I wanted to give back to the community," Brown said. "I've seen kids, introverts like me, take lead roles. There are a lot of success stories."

Kim Brown said the Little Theater brightens the lives of everyone it touches. The success of the theaters is not without sacrifice as both theaters are limping along financially, said Brown's wife Marilyn.

Kim Brown said he is constantly surprised at the amount of time and money the theater still demands of his father.

"Over the last five years I have seen my father give most of his time, sometimes 20 hours a day," Kim Brown said. "But I can see that the theater is gaining momentum in our community and that is good for my dad."

Kim Brown said his father's goal is to get the theater to the point where it can stand on its own.

Currently Brown life is still far from relaxed.

Brown is finishing his degree at BYU with only 3 more classes to go.

Kim Brown said his father's decision to return to college was to give him the chance to really learn.

Brown also stills donates 15 to 20 hours a week to the theater and works his full time job at Brown Real Estate, which he reopened last November.

Brown says for now his goals are to get the real estate business going again, so that he can leave it for his children and to serve a mission with his wife for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"Dad is always racing off to some finish line no one can see, who knows exactly what his future will hold," Kim Brown said.

NAACP wants tv diversity

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - The NAACP renewed threats of a boycott unless television networks hire more minority actors and executives to produce racially diverse programs.

The civil rights group said the four major television networks — ABC, CBS, NBC and Fox — have made little progress since they promised last year to improve diversity on screen and behind the cameras.

The board of directors for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People plans to meet in October to consider a boycott.

The group first talked about a boycott two years ago, and NAACP President Kweisi Mfume said the group is tired of waiting and may finally take action.

"The NAACP is not prepared ... to announce that we are going to begin this decade with a sort of wait-and-see approach as it relates to network television," Mfume told a news conference Wednesday.

Mfume refused to identify which network the group may target, but said only one would be subject to the boycott.

Stan Crump, head swimming coach at BYU, introduced Lemon and spoke of the level of excitement she brought to her swim meets.

"One of the fiercest competitors that I have ever known," Crump said.

Lemon broke 22 school records during her stay here at BYU, and finished in the top ten at the NCAA Championships four times. She earned five All-American citations as an outstanding swimmer.

In a day when BYU had no platform for diving, Nelson-Murrell led the nation twice in the event.

Nelson-Murrell would travel once a month to Stanford University to train with her club coach.

Nelson-Murrell won the NCAA's first platform diving title in 1990 and successfully defended her title the following year. Having won seven All-American awards, Nelson-Murrell is BYU's most decorated diver.

Toolson was a key part of the 1988 BYU basketball team that won 17 consecutive games and was ranked as high as second in the nation.

Toolson still holds records at BYU for most career three-pointers made (141) and most three-pointers made in a season (74). As a senior at BYU, Toolson lead BYU to a 1990 WAC title, averaged 18.3 points and was named a GTE Academic All-American.

Currently, Toolson has been brought on to the men's basketball coaching staff as an assistant coach.

Karl Tucker led the BYU golf team to the first NCAA team championship at BYU in 1981.

Under Tucker's direction, BYU won 19 WAC titles and 69 of Tucker's players were named All-Americans.

BYU kick-starts season

By Tim Gudmundson
tim@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

The BYU women's soccer team is ready to begin action in the fall. The Cougars will play the Blue and White Game Aug. 28 at 7 p.m. and their first game will be in Provo against USC on Aug. 31.

The Cougars lose six starters from last year's team. Head coach Jennifer Rockwood recognizes the challenge this presents.

"Most of those six seniors started all four years of their career so they had a huge impact on where our program is today," Rockwood said. "They're the players that helped bring us national respect and national prominence. They'll definitely be missed."

Rockwood said she has confidence in her returning starters to step up this year to compensate for the loss of the seniors.

"It will be interesting to see how everything comes out," Rockwood said. "We lost six starters from last year's team. There's definitely some big shoes we're going to have to fill but I really feel that we have the personnel from our returning players who can step up and try and fill some of those shoes."

BYU will not only look for the contribution of the returning starters, but hope to get contributions from their freshmen as well.

"We have probably the most competitive recruiting class we've ever brought in for 2001," Rockwood said. "We're looking forward to the contributions of our incoming freshmen. We feel that they will have an immediate impact on our program this year."

Kim Devine,a forward, is a freshman this year for the Cougars. Devine was a highly-sought after recruit that should see lots of action this year for the Cougars. She is currently playing for the under-19 U.S. national team in Germany.

"Kim is someone we're expecting to be a goal scorer for us right off the bat," Rockwood said. "She was recruited by the top programs in the country so we're really excited that she chose to come to BYU."

BYU also hopes Aleisha Cramer, a sophomore, will have an encore performance of last year. As a freshman, Cramer garnered first-team all-American honors. This year she has been named as a preseason all-American.

Cramer played with the full women's national team this summer. She had the chance to start for the U.S. team when they played in Minnesota and she said that experience has been helpful.

"We're going to be young and we're going to have to step up and take some leadership," Cramer said.

Cramer appreciates all the support BYU fans give the team.

"I had heard that BYU had good fans but when I went there I thought it was awesome," Cramer said. "They're loud too…It's so fun to plain front of them."

Cramer was heavily recuited out of high school but chose BYU because of the Cougars' team chemistry.

"It seemed like all the girls got along," Cramer said. "They just seemed like really good friends."

Coach Rockwood had a chance to see the team earlier in the year.

"We had a great spring season," Rockwood said. "We went 7-1 and beat four top 20 teams without our seniors. I think that gave our players a lot of confidence going into this year."

The young team this year will face a very difficult schedule. Their most difficult games include USC, Washington, Portland, Virginia, Wake Forest and Nebraska. All but the USC game will be on the road.

"We have a very demanding schedule this year," Rockwood said.

10 of BYU's games are against teams that were in last year's NCAA tournament.

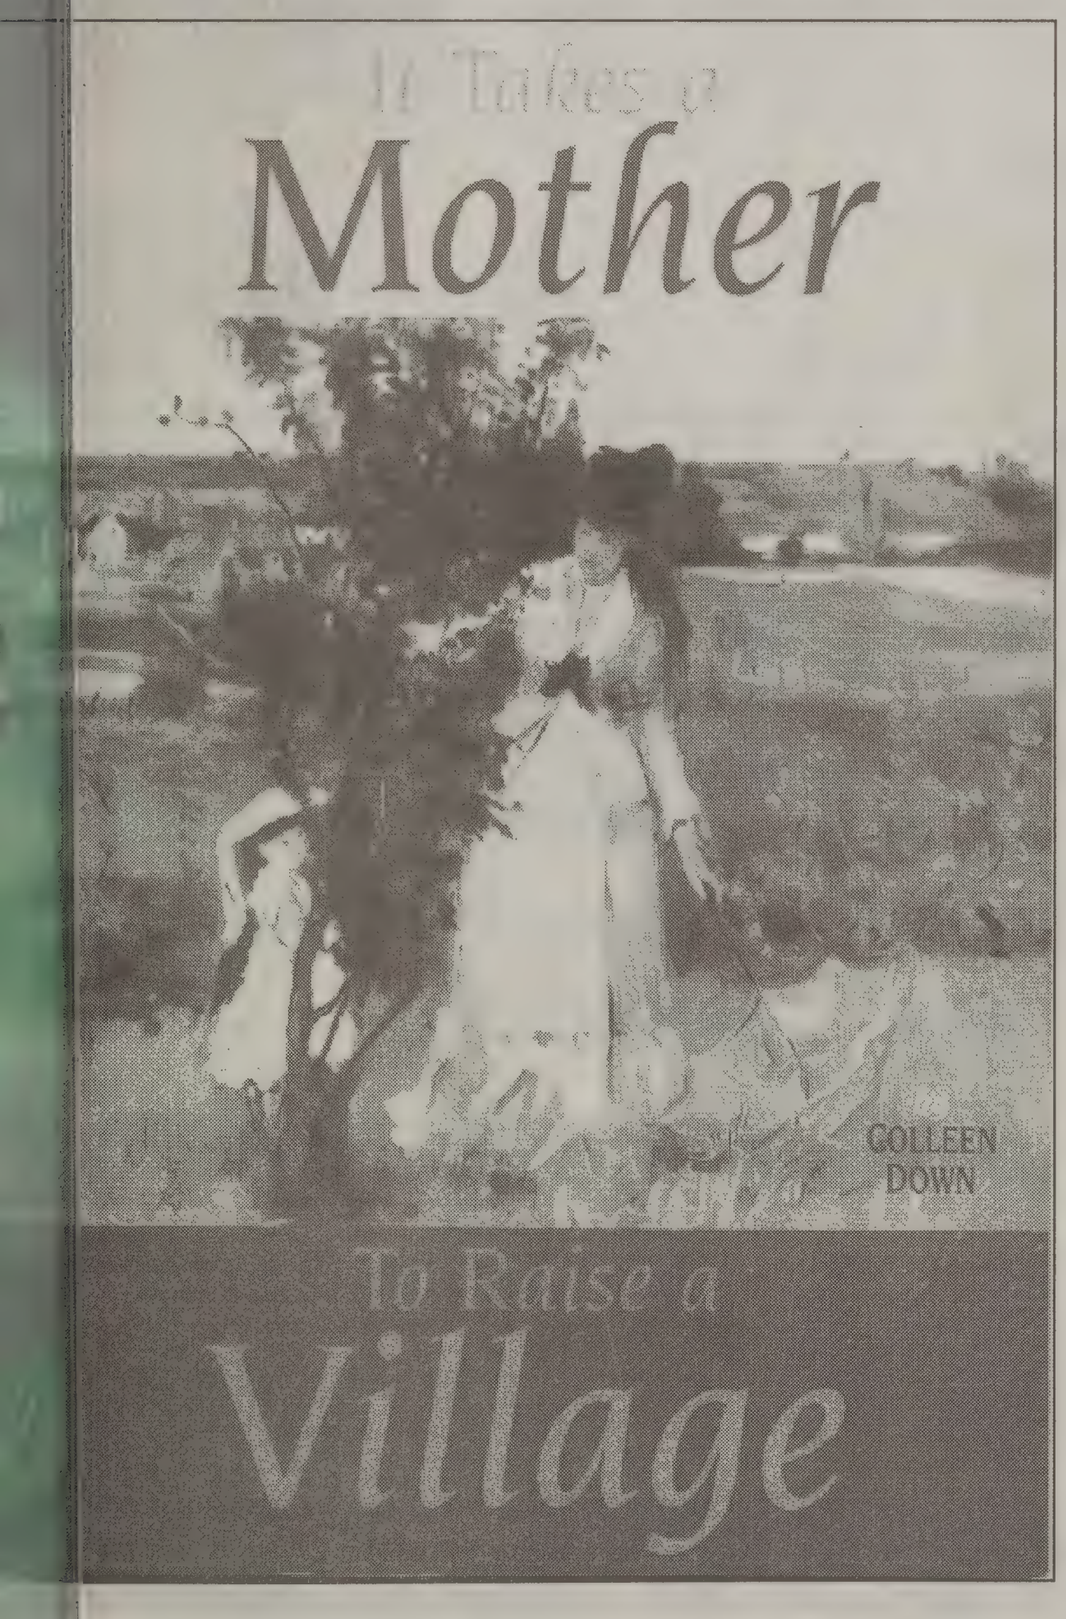
Takes a Mother To Raise a Village

By Colleen Down

"Full time mom, Colleen Down, has decided to ignore her buzzing dryer and ringing phone long enough to stand up and defend those whose profession it is to rock the cradle, and to remind them once again that they truly do have the power to change the world."

Finally! A book standing up for Motherhood!



"I LOVED your book! It's long overdue! I want to send copies of your book to all my daughters. It should be mandatory reading for every mother - AND fathers, worldwide." Carol–Provo, UT

"It Takes a Mother to Raise a Village has reaffirmed my feelings on the importance of mothers and the family in the world today. I intend to recommend it to all my friends!" Heather–Santa Rosa, CA

"I loved it!!! I read your book in just a couple of settings because it was hard to put down...You made me laugh a lot and you made me cry more than once...Thank you for being an advocate for mothers everywhere." Kay–American Fork, UT

"You hit the nail on the head to every issue that a striving mother this day and age must face. Most important is the manner in which you did it. It was humorous but yet so very real!...I really, really loved reading this book." Joyce–Aliquippa, PA

"What a wonderful book!...I am feeling even more inspired now on my choices with my life as a full time mother...I feel such a strength to continue on, as I know I am really NOT alone!" Laura–Colorado Springs, CO

"I laughed, cried, and wondered how you knew me so well. I don't know how anyone who has children could not relate to your book. I loved it so much I couldn't stop reading." Karen–Snowflake, AZ

Edwards hands off legacy to coach Crowton

By Kim Brauning
brauning@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

As BYU fans say good-bye to LaVell Edwards, new head coach Gary Crowton is gearing up for the 2001 BYU football season.

Crowton's 15-year coaching career has taken him all over the country.

He has been in various coaching positions at Snow College, Western Illinois University, University of New Hampshire, Boston College, Georgia Tech and head coach at Louisiana Tech.

Although he has enjoyed all the places he has been, as a native of Orem and a BYU graduate, Crowton said he is happy to be back in Utah.

"Every place I've coached has uniqueness about it. BYU is unique because it's in a community where the church is really strong," Crowton said. "There's good education in the area and good people with good values."

According to Jeff Reynolds, director of football media relations at BYU, the decision to hire Crowton was based on a variety of factors.

"Certainly, BYU has a unique environment," Reynolds said. "If you're on the search committee, you're going to have to find someone that is familiar with that environment and build on it from there."

Reynolds said that Crowton's past successes were also impressive.

"Gary stood out because of the success he's had," Reynolds said. "He's been around the country and had experiences at different levels and in different leagues. He had a lot of big wins at Louisiana Tech and basically turned the program around down there."

Crowton said although all of his coaching experiences have been good, he really enjoys being head coach.

"I like being head coach because I like having the ability to go totally in the direction that I have the vision to go in," Crowton said. "As a head coach, you're in total control. As assistant coach, it just depends on your head coach."

Although the tradition of LaVell Edwards might be a hard act to follow, Crowton said he is honored to have the privilege to follow in his footsteps.

"I'm very humbled to have the opportunity to coach and be the successor to coach Edwards," Crowton said. "I'm also flattered that he would recommend me."

Crowton said his coaching style is similar to that of Edwards.

"I really have a similar coaching philosophy of LaVell Edwards in a lot of things," Crowton said. "I learned a lot from him when I was a younger coach just by watching him and some of the things he'd done."

Crowton said he cannot be LaVell Edwards. However, he plans on using what LaVell Edwards started and combine it with his own experiences to build BYU's football future.

"I'm just going to try to take the things that coach Edwards instilled and build from that," Crowton said. "I'll learn from the history and use some of my own ideas to help us in the future."

Shirley Johnson served as LaVell Edward's executive assistant in the football office and is now working with Crowton.

Johnson said everyone seems to be excited about the changes that are taking place.

"There's a real charged feeling. Everyone is excited and they've been working real hard to get everything fit for spring ball," Johnson said. "I think the players really respect him and are really excited."

Big name schools go for wins with no-name quarterback

Associated Press

Tee Martin accomplished a rare feat three years ago. No, not leading Tennessee to a win over Florida, but guiding the Volunteers to the national championship in his first season as the starting quarterback.

Martin has company, but not much. Since 1980, only three first-time, season-opening starters have been able to guide their team to the national title.

Another name might be added to that list in the 2001 college football odyssey.

Seven of the top 15 teams in the AP preseason poll, including No. 1 Florida, No. 3 Oklahoma and No. 6 Florida State, begin their title quest with newly appointed starters.

The others are No. 9 Virginia Tech, No. 12 Michigan, No. 13 Kansas State and No. 15 Washington.

Besides Martin, the other quarterbacks on the short list both played for Miami — Bernie Kosar in 1983 and Steve Walsh in 1987.

Miami has an added distinction: Two first-timers combined to pass the Hurricanes to the '89 crown — Craig Erickson and Gino Torretta.

And there's also Oklahoma freshman Jamelle Holieway. He led the Sooners to the '85 title after taking over for the injured Troy Aikman in the fourth game of the season.

Miami, with Heisman Trophy hopeful Ken Dorsey returning after a sensational season, needn't worry about quarterback inexperience this time around.

But unless Rex Grossman or Brock Berlin at Florida, Nate Hybl at Oklahoma, Chris Rix at Florida State and Grant Noel at Virginia Tech produce special seasons, their teams will be knocked off the road to the BCS national title game in the Rose Bowl on Jan. 3.

Same is true for John Navarre at Michigan, El Roberson at Kansas State and Cody Pickett or Taylor Barton at Washington.

What's the key to success for a new quarterback? David Cutcliffe, the Vols' offensive coordinator in 1998 and now the coach at Mississippi, says it's teamwork.

"I think the most important factor for a young quarterback to remember is to focus on his role as a member of the team," he said. "Playing a sound, disciplined brand of football that allows all 10 of the other players to be the best they can be."

The Gators' only national title came in 1996 under the leadership of Heisman Trophy winner Danny Wuerrfel.

Coach Steve Spurrier wants to choose between Grossman and Berlin, but won't hesitate to alternate, which he has done frequently. Florida won three of its seven SEC titles using two quarterbacks.

Grossman, a 6-foot-1, 218-pound sophomore, started the final eight games last season (131-of-212 for 1,866 yards and 21 TDs), and gets the experience edge. But Berlin, a 6-1, 209-pound sophomore, has the stronger arm.

Spurrier expects to make his call next week.

"If he's good enough to play all year, to stay healthy and play well, he'll have a chance," Spurrier said of whomever he picks. "But if he struggles, we feel we've got a couple guys who are able to play."

Like Martin at Tennessee in '98, Florida's quarterback will be surrounded by stars, beginning with wide receivers Jabar Gaffney and a solid line headed by Mike Pearson at tackle.

The defense is anchored by cornerback Lito Sheppard and end Alex Brown. Also back is kicker Jeff Chandler, the Gators' career leading scorer.

The defending national champs bring 16 starters back, but Heisman runner-up Josh Heupel isn't one of them.

Up steps junior Nate Hybl, the 6-3, 215-pound Georgia transfer, who beat out 6-2, 220-pound sophomore Jason White. The two have thrown a combined 16 passes at OU — all by Hybl.

Coach Bob Stoops doesn't seem worried. He says Hybl has a better grasp of the Sooners' pass-happy offense than Heupel did when he came to Norman. Hybl also runs faster and has a stronger arm.

"The way I look at it, they're both miles ahead of where Josh Heupel was when he entered here for his first game," Stoops said.

Oklahoma returns a talented corps of receivers — the top eight accounted for 3,512 yards and 21 TDs — as well as running back Quentin Griffin, who had 1,189 all-purpose yards and 16 TDs. The defense is led by All-American linebacker Rocky Calmus and strong safety Roy Williams.

Seminoles coach Bobby Bowden doesn't usually have quarterback woes, but this year he does - Chris Rix will be throwing his first college pass on Sept. 1 against Duke.

Rix was named the starter and Anquan Boldin, who was competing for the job, returned to wide receiver. Rix is a 6-4, 200-pound redshirt freshman with a strong arm, and he'll be backed up by freshman Adrian McPherson.

Look for the Seminoles to run early and often and their defense to excel as Rix gains experience. The 'Noles replace 15 starters from last year's team that played for the national championship.

In winning its two titles, Florida State rode the arms of Heisman-winning quarterbacks — Charlie Ward in 1993 and Chris Weinke in 1999.

The dashing Michael Vick is gone after two years of 11-1 records, and the Hokies open with 6-1, 222-pound junior Grant Noel, who has thrown 12 passes in two years.

Running back Lee Suggs (

"Your dream as a 12-year-old kid isn't to be an umpire," Uyl said.

Uhlenhopp played high school baseball and started umpiring high school games in between semesters at college to earn some extra money. At the amateur level, Uhlenhopp said other umpires started to encourage him to become a professional.

Uhlenhopp said he is grateful to those umpires who helped him improve his skills and would advise amateur umpires to talk with lots of other experienced professionals before making the decision to become a professional umpire.

"I improved a lot just talking to guys with experience," Uhlenhopp said.

In order to make the jump from an amateur umpire to a professional umpire, with the chance of becoming a major league umpire, all candidates must attend a five-week school in January, John Brammer said.

Jim Evans, founder, owner and chief instructor for the Academy of Professional Umpiring runs an umpiring school from the beginning of January through mid-February. According to his website, the goal of the school is to give those students the skills and knowledge necessary to succeed at the highest professional level possible.

Lee said the school costs roughly $3,000 and is not all fun in the Florida sun.

"It's long and they teach you what you need to know," Lee said.

Classes go from Monday through Saturday and are all day events, Lee said.

The average age for an umpire who attends the school is about 24 or 25, but it is not unusual to find teenagers working at this level of baseball, Lee said.

The Pioneer League is a rookie league and is one level below single A baseball. Each umpire does not have the option, like talented baseball players do, to jump leagues whenever their talent is needed. Umpires must spend a minimum of two years at each level of umpiring before they are evaluated and given an opportunity to advance up the ladder, Uhlenhopp said.

"The odds of making it to the big leagues are very, very small," Uhlenhopp said.

Even coming out of umpiring school and making it to the rookie leagues is selective. Depending on the year, 10 to 25 umpires from each of the two schools will go to an evaluation course of 10 days in mid-March, Brammer said.

Once an umpire does make it into the minor leagues, life does not get any easier. Umpires must deal with high expectations from fans, managers and supervisors, Lee said.

Even with the Provo Angels averaging 1,460 fans, according to official Pioneer League stats, it is not the verbal abuse from the fans that bothers umpires, Lee said.

"The fans, I could care less," Lee said.

The main worry is keeping the managers under control, within guidelines given from supervisors, Lee said.

"Our objective is to keep the people in the game, unless they get personal and eject themselves," he said.

Special teams help out BYU

By Mark Lyman
lyman@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Teamwork isn't a problem for this year's special teams.

Besides being part of an intramural softball championship team during spring term, Aaron Edmonds, Anthony Ward and Ned Stearns all started on last year's football team.

"The more we work together, the more confidence we have in each other," said Anthony Ward, senior defensive lineman and deep snapper on the special teams.

This year's special teams received attention from Mountain West Conference media, when Aaron Edmonds was selected to the pre-season All-MWC team.

"It's an honor to be recognized as one of the top punters in the conference," said Edmonds, senior punter and kicker for the Cougars.

Edmonds led the MWC with a 43.6 yards-per-kick average last year and impressed BYU coaches with his ability to be a team player.

"He performed very well last year, especially in his directional punting and the leadership he gave," said Barry Lamb, special teams coordinator. "He really helped out the team — a real team player."

Edmonds excellent placement of his punts last year — placing 17 punts inside the 20-yard line — is what will really help him to continue his career after college, Lamb said.

"He can kick the long ball, but his forte is really getting it out of bounds, right on the sidelines, where we have asked him to do it," Lamb said. "So that helps our punt protection and punt coverage teams."

Punt protection is essential for a punter to be successful, as the Cougars did not allow a single blocked punt in the 2000 season.

Protecting Edmonds this year will be No. 3, senior running back, Stearns.

"I make sure nobody hits him, and he doesn't have to tackle anybody," Stearns said.

Stearns plays a position on special teams not very well known on the field. Sometimes referred to as personal protector or fullback, Stearns will play roughly four yards off the ball during punt situations and is in charge of running the play, Lamb said.

"That is the guy that is the quarterback of the unit, he sets the blocking scheme, he makes the calls, he sets the punter," Lamb said.

Stearns said he got the position as personal protector about two years ago when somebody else got hurt and he tried out for the position. For him, it was a way to get onto the field.

Receiving little national attention is common for special teams, and the position of deep sna is no exception. Ward said i snappers only get noticed they mess up.

Ward and Edmonds were t mates at Ricks College, Ward earned first-team Western State Football Le honors. Ward is a defensive man who also plays deep sna because he was "goofing ar at practice at Ricks" and ou formed Edmonds previous su per. Ward joined Edmonds h BYU and is now in his third of deep snapping.

Redshirt freshman Matt P has the unenviable task of t the first non-Pochman in s years to be BYU's place-kick

"Quite honestly, we've very spoiled over the last s years, having Pochman there, both of them," Lamb rows, arches, and secret canyons are commonplace in the park. The fold is most clearly seen in the park's southern section, along Hall's Creek. Sections of the fold resemble an angry sea frozen in stone, while others look like towers of polished ivory. To the north is Cathedral Valley, where rock spires rise hundreds of feet from a barren plain.

"It's really breathtaking, but in a different way from Zion or Canyonlands," said Bailey. "It's almost like arriving on a different planet."

In addition to its geology value, Capitol Reef is relevant to anyone interested in Utah history, Gaughan said.

Fruita is an old pioneer settlement, formed by members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, located within the park boundaries. Established during the late 1870's, this community was one of the most isolated in the US, according to the park's Website.

"It's common for a visitor to say they had a great grandmother who lived in Fruita," Gaughan said. "This area has a lot of family connections for Utahns."

Visitors can still see remnants of the Fruita settlement, including a historic schoolhouse and acres of fruit orchards. One hiking trail is called "Cohab Canyon," and claims to be the hiding place of polygamists during times of federal prosecution.

Capitol Reef's historic value extends far beyond Fruita. The area has a multicultural history, and was inhabited by numerous Native American tribes such as the Anasazi, Fremont, Ute, and Paiute.

The Museum of People and Cultures is exhibiting "The Pectol-Lee Collection of Artifacts from Capitol Reef." This features Fremont and Anasazi relics discovered by Capitol Reef's local residents during the early 1900s.

Also displayed are portraits of the stunning landscapes in which the artifacts were found. The collection will be open until May 2002.

Geologic and historic value aside, the main attractions of Capitol Reef are the scenery and activities. The area is a haven for hiking, backpacking, four wheeling, and mountain biking.

There are a wide variety of hikes in the park, ranging from easy one-mile strolls, to strenuous overnighters. No matter the difficulty of the trail, all hikers must bring water and use a map, especially during summer when average temperatures reach 90 degrees.

Nathan Hanamaikai, 24, a senior from Clovis, California, majoring in Spanish Translation, learned this lesson the hard way.

On a recent hiking trip in Strike Valley, located at the isolated southern tip of the park, Hanamaikai misread a topographic map and then ran out of water. The effects of dehydration were soon upon him.He said he experienced muscle cramps, throbbing kidneys, and nausea, not to mention extreme thirst and a parched throat.

"It probably would have been more enjoyable during spring, instead of summer," he said.

Along with dehydration, visitors need to be aware of flash floods, said Gaughan.

There has been no injuries related to flash floods, but everyone needs to be aware of them, especially during the park's rainy season from July to September, she said.

The closest town to Capitol Reef is Torrey, an interesting mix of trendy cafes and old farms, and is 11 miles away.

Despite the park's enormity, Highway 24 is the only paved road in Capitol Reef, bisecting the park into north and south halves. To reach either tip, where most of the scenery is located, a sound four-wheel drive vehicle is required.

For more information about Capitol Reef, visit the National Park Service Website at www.nps.gov, or call the park at (435) 425-3791.

New college dreams big

Associated Press

ALISO VIEJO, Calif. Ahmir Nezhad was bound for the University of California, Los Angeles when he heard about the brand new liberal arts college with a big dream.

There, he was told, he could participate in a Buddhist-inspired experiment attending a private university where learning to make money was less important than promoting world peace, students must travel abroad and everyone from the president to the janitor has the same size office.

Nezhad thought it over and enrolled as part of the first freshman class at Soka University of America. The school opens this month.

"A lot of people think I'm taking a risk, sacrificing something," said Nezhad, an 18-year-old from Diamond Bar. "I think I'm actually part of something."

The $220 million campus has inviting architecture, lush landscaping and sweeping views from a hill overlooking this Orange County community 70 miles south of Los Angeles. Administrators hope the school one day will become a standard of higher education.

"The spectacle of a liberal arts college in a private sector with its financial future assured is nothing less than astounding," said Christopher J. Lucas, author of "American Higher Education: A History." "It's a one-time, one-of-a-kind college."

The university is financed by Soka Gakkai International, a controversial Japanese sect that is one of the world's largest lay Buddhist organizations.

Founded more than 70 years ago by philosopher and educator Tsunesaburo Makiguchi, the sect created the Komeito reform political party in the 1960s.

Members forced their way into followers' homes to make sure they were adhering to the beliefs, and the sect banned mixing of religions, said Nobutaka Inoue, a religion professor at Kokugakuin University in Tokyo.

Faith, priorities aid family with uncertain future

By Diana Lee

Craig Park and his father, Doug, spend time together visiting Church history sites. Craig Park says his father's heart problems have helped him keep his priorities in order.

When Craig Park's father had a quadruple heart bypass, nothing was more important than spending quality time with his family.

Park, 22, lives his life like most college students. He thinks about getting through school, spending time with friends and being in the mountains.

Park said he has worked toward building a good relationship with his father, because he will never know when he will see his father for the last time.

"We live life just like any other family does. But I've been able to reflect on my priorities, which has allowed me to feel more at peace. If something was to happen, I would be OK," said Park, a junior from Salt Lake City, majoring in business management.

Thousands of young adults live with or know of a loved one suffering from medical conditions.

Oftentimes young people will take their families for granted, but when that family structure becomes threatened, suddenly they realize that something that they think will always be there may not be anymore, said Kelly McCoy, an assistant professor in the Department of Marriage, Family and Human Development.

"It's not until you are placed in a situation where you are not near people that are a part of your life that you realize how important they really are to your life," McCoy said.

Melissa Griffiths, 21, a junior from Spanish Fork, majoring in visual arts, has a father who had past heart problems and taught her to take more interest in her family.

"Things like this make you try to come to an understanding of your parents now rather than later, because with heart problems, anything can happen suddenly." Griffiths said.

There is a bond to begin with, which allows children to cling to the family. Having strong family ties bring the children back when something shakes their world, McCoy said.

McCoy has observed that many of his students said they felt uncomfortable around their families before coming to college and it wasn't until they were away from their families that they really learned to appreciate what they had.

"Knowing that you have a support network where you are loved and cared about and knowing that a part of that network is a God who loves you — I think that comes from a family and a spiritual connection," McCoy said.

Just because Park spends most of his time with his friends doesn't mean he is oblivious to his father's situation.

He said that, even to this day, the reminder of his father's health has the tendency to make him speak softer.

"This situation doesn't make me unique because it happens to a lot of people, but it makes me more at peace with life and focus on what's important," Park said.

Believing in a religion, and particularly the religious perspective members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, allows us to look at Heaven in a more positive perspective — as something that is desired rather than feared, McCoy said.

McCoy quotes from author and child psychologist, David Elkind's article in the Journal of Child Development about adolescent egocentrism theory.

"Oftentimes kids come to believe that they are unique, and that the experiences they have are unlike experiences anyone else has had. By having a strong sense of religion in their lives helps give a sense of perspective, even as one is going through the adolescent egocentrism – it gives a sense that there is more to life than the here and now." (Egocentrism and Adolescence)

Park said knowing what life is about and that God is there helps him through difficult times.

McCoy said, "God becomes the one person that many young people feel like they can go to. And the perspective of having a Heavenly Father who cares for us is something that brings comfort, gives perspective, and a greater sense of hope."

Parks said that it takes a tragedy to realize what is really important.

"My religion has taught me to handle trials better, and look at the big picture more. I have learned that a relationship built over a lifetime is what counts and not something built in a day," Park said.

Plane crashes often prove survivable

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Drew Feldman buckles himself into his airplane seat and pops in his favorite CD - tuning in the music, tuning out the flight attendant delivering the safety spiel up front.

Already a jaded passenger at 17, Feldman doesn't want to hear yet again about emergency exits, oxygen masks and seat cushions that float.

"It's pointless," Feldman, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., said later at Reagan Washington National Airport. "If you're going to crash on a plane, you're going to die."

Actually, the chances of surviving an accident are fairly high. And interviews with survivors show that many have the presence of mind amid the chaos of an accident to do what they were told before takeoff.

But the briefings, required since the early 1960s, often are ignored - by people certain they are doomed anyway if something goes wrong, by those who are convinced they are safe and by those who think they have heard it all too many times.

To pique interest, some flight attendants are getting downright goofy.

"We have some flight attendants who travel with ukuleles and sing the flight safety message," said Linda Rutherford, speaking for Dallas-based Southwest Airlines. "We have some who do it while impersonating people like Arnold Schwarzenegger or Elvis.

"Some sing them - like to the theme of the 'Beverly Hillbillies.' And we have some who have made them into a kind of rap."

In recent years, some airlines have started showing safety videos on small monitors above the seats. Others now begin safety demonstrations with a reminder to listen, or at least stay quiet.

Officials are hard-pressed to prove that passengers who listen are more likely to live, but it is clear the message can sink in.

A 13-year-old girl on American Airlines Flight 1420, which overshot the runway after landing at Little Rock, Ark., in June 1999, killing 11 people, told investigators she remembered from the briefing how to don the oxygen mask when it dropped down.

As it turned out, the mask did not work; she escaped through a crack in the plane as the rea the aircraft burned.

A woman remembered from briefing that the nearest exit behind her but instead wal forward toward the light and a hole in first class.

In all, 134 people survived.

In a 1991 collision betw USAir and Skywest planes at Angeles, passengers credite special preflight briefing those sitting by an emerge exit with helping them get The accident killed 34 people survived.

"I did like a good wife should and I was at the store when I needed to be," she said. "But my husband felt very strongly about me being home and never expected me to work."

While busy with the store, and then working in real estate, Eli Clayson also served in the stake presidency for 17 years.

"Dad was gone a lot," said Stephen Clayson, the youngest, who is now a cardiovascular surgeon at LDS Hospital in Salt Lake City. "Whether it was work, the school board or church responsibilities, he encouraged mom to share his love for us and run the home in his absence."

In the Clayson home, both parents taught the importance of education to their children.

"Education was number one in our lives and my husband was a great lover of books," Beulah Clayson said. "I was extremely firm about school attendance with my children and if they were sick enough to stay home from school, they stayed in bed all day."

Whenever the children had a question, instead of just giving them the answers, Eli Clayson would sit down with them and help them look it up in an encyclopedia.

"He was a great teacher to our children and my training helped me teach them as well," she said. "A teacher is a teacher is a teacher."

The Clayson's daughter, Karen Batt, remembers this emphasis on school.

"We never took vacations during school and homework was the first thing that happened when we got home," Batt said.

Beulah Clayson said she felt that a college education is important for everyone, so she urged her children to attain one. All three of their sons became doctors and Batt finished a college degree as well.

Clayson also stressed the importance of having a musical background because it develops children's abilities to enjoy good things of all kinds. All of her children and grandchildren have taken piano lessons, she said.

"I felt it was worth the money for piano lessons because even if they can't play, they can enjoy good music," Beulah Clayson said. "Money is not wasted on lessons because it develops their abilities to appreciate good things."

Batt said that although Beulah Clayson did not have a lot of musical experience of her own, she wanted her children to have music in their lives.

"She knew it was something that would make our lives better and she always had a good feeling about what would be good for us," Batt said. "She has such a good sense of the things in life that are fine and she wanted us to participate in those."

In 1974, Eli Clayson was called as a mission president in the Germany Frankfurt Mission. Beulah Clayson said she loved being a mission president's wife and the time she spent in Germany.

She said she enjoyed the people, the calling and working with the young people especially.

Beulah Clayson said she worked very hard to remember the missionaries' names and something about their families so they would be more comfortable being away from home.

While they were waiting for an interview with her husband, the missionaries would talk with her, and her husband said she sometimes got them to open up more to her.

In 1977 when they returned from their mission service in Germany, the Claysons returned to Utah and settled in Provo, in the home in which Beulah Clayson still lives.

Eli Clayson was immediately called to serve as a high councilor, then a member of the stake presidency in the BYU Third Stake, and just a few years later called as a regional representative for Germany. In that time, Buelah Clayson served as a counselor in the BYU stake Relief Society presidency.

Eli Clayson also served as a sealer in the Provo Temple for 23 years, from the time the couple returned from their mission right up until his death. Beulah Clayson worked in the temple for nine years herself, until her health forced her to stop.

When she could no longer work at the temple, Beulah Clayson used her time to read, which she still enjoys. She also likes crocheting, knitting, and making hand-dipped chocolates, which she still takes to her family and friends at Christmas. At the suggestion that she was a talented lady, she replied, "Oh no I'm not."

"We wanted whatever we did to require a sacrifice, we weren't going to do it once then pat ourselves on the back and say we were done," said Ruth Brasher, ward Relief Society President.

The project soon blossomed into a much larger undertaking. The EMTs couldn't use as many bears as the women could provide, so they joined with Provo's Children's Justice Center and continued pumping out bears for children being counseled for abuse.

The center set up a "bear room" where children who have been abused can be interviewed by Child Protection Services in an environment where they feel safe.

Judee Gillies, clinical coordinator explained that each child treated at the center is given a bear to take home.

"The teddy bears make the situation less intimidating," Gillies said.

Now the women have been making the bears for over 10 years and have been affectionately nicknamed the "bear ladies" by workers at the center. During this time, they have sewn over 7,000 teddy bears.

A lot of time, money and devotion go into making each bear. Brasher said the members of the ward relief society donate the money for stuffing, using the best quality so the bears can be washed.

Each one takes four to five hours to complete. The bear ladies meet once a month for a five-hour session to work on the continuous project.

"It's very meaningful to the women who make the bears, there are significant benefits for both those who make and those who receive," Brasher said.

The bear ladies have had a wonderful impact on the center and the children. The ward has heard reports from mothers that children who receive the bears still keep them.

When asked just how long the bear ladies will keep up the production of the bears, Brasher responded,

"We don't know, as long as there are children continue to need them."

As for now the bear ladies have no end in sight.

"The problem is that people receiving the IOC president want to be nice," Carrard said. "It is true that it becomes embarrassing to refuse."

As for SLOC president Mitt Romney, his staff scrambled to devise a housing plan for Rogge. Other IOC delegates and officials will stay downtown at the organization's hotel, the 17-story Little America.

One month after Rogge's request, SLOC officials are wrangling with logistical issues and don't know exactly where he will sleep.

Compounding the problem, Rogge needs an adjacent room with a desk and telephone and he'll be attending IOC functions around town. Romney joked that Rogge, with his busy schedule, might keep weary athletes awake.

"We don't want him accessible to the media, so we won't be putting him near a fence," Romney said. "We want him to get in and out easily. We don't want to have a meeting held up for 30 minutes because he's trying to get through a chokepoint in the village."

SLOC officials have indicated they might save a hotel room for Rogge in case he can't return to the village for some reason.

Rogge doesn't care where he stays, as long as it's in the village. During his visit to the dorms, he sat on a bed, looked at the bare white walls of the 200-square-foot room and broke into a big smile.

"This is all that I need," he said. "Nothing more."

The dorm has nothing more than what a college student needs. It's cozy, with a twin-sized mattress, oak-veneer furniture, close-cropped industrial-style carpet and a cramped closet barely big enough to stand inside.

At the Little America's 1,800-square-foot presidential suite, the marble-walled bathroom is as big as the dorm room. It has a chandelier, a 5-by-6-foot Roman tub, and sinks made of Italian marble.

The suite, which costs $750 a night, also has a marble fireplace, molded ceilings, a wet bar, a kitchenette with a stove and refrigerator, a dressing room and vanity, a king-sized bed and sweeping city views from the balconies.

The dorms won't have daily maid service, special meals or room service. But Rogge can catch a movie at the theater or work out at the fitness center.

The village also will have a bank, a beauty salon, a post office, coffee shops, social halls and an Internet cafe, one of the most popular sites in the Olympic villages at Sydney and Nagano.

At meals, the three-time Olympic sailor and five-time Belgian Olympic team leader will sit with athletes in the cafeteria.

Rogge denied trying to send a political message by staying in the village. He insisted it's simply more fun.

Royal butler charged with property theft

Associated Press

LONDON -- Paul Burrell, trusted butler of Princess Diana for many years, was charged Thursday with the theft of property that had belonged to her. He denied all the charges.

Burrell, Diana's "rock" and confidant, was charged with stealing 342 items from Diana, Prince Charles and Prince William on or before June 30, 1998, at Kensington Palace. Some of the items included a bullwhip, a pepper grinder and photographs.

The 43-year-old Burrell was charged with three counts of theft - one each for items belonging to Charles, Diana and William - and was ordered to appear at Bow Street magistrates court on Friday.

Stony-faced and silent, Burrell left West End Central police station and was bundled into a taxi by police officers.

His lawyer, Andrew Shaw, read a short statement from the steps of the station.

"Paul Burrell denies absolutely the charges that have been preferred against him," Shaw said. "He's rightly perceived to be a man of integrity and trusted by the royal family. He says that their trust is justified."

Among the six items he is accused of stealing from Prince Charles are an inscribed silver salver, a white metal pepper grinder and a book, "Royal Institute of Painters in Watercolour." Another was described by police only as "an Indiana Jones bullwhip."

Burrell had been arrested on suspicion of theft in January. His home near Chester in northwest England was searched by officers who allegedly found Diana's personal effects.

Burrell has been free on bail since then, and has maintained the items were given to him by his employer.

After Diana's death in a car crash Aug. 31, 1997, Burrell was widely praised for refraining from making money from his connection with the princess or revealing private information about her.

He helped prepare Diana's body for burial, and he was the only person outside her immediate family to attend the burial at her family's estate.

Soon afterward, the queen awarded him the Royal Victorian Medal for his services to the royal family.

Three other men had been arrested in connection with the thefts earlier in the year. In April, London's Metropolitan Police charged Harold Brown, 48, with four counts of theft involving items from the princess's estate.

The stolen goods include several pieces of jewelry and $1,700, as well as a bejeweled model of a dhow -- an Arab sailing vessel -- that Diana and Charles received as a wedding gift from the Emir of Bahrain. According to news reports, police were alerted when the vessel was put up for sale at a London art dealer's shop.

Brown was working for Princess Margaret, sister of Queen Elizabeth II, at Kensington Palace, where Diana also had an apartment.

Burrell joined the royal staff in 1976 as a trainee footman after completing a college course in hotel management. Within a year he was made personal footman to the monarch.

In 1986 he and his wife Maria were given jobs as butler and maid at Charles' country home at Highgrove in western England.

"The support of embryonic stem cell research is a consistent with pro-life and pro-family values," Hatch said in a recent hearing before the House Subcommittee on Criminal Justice.

Hatch said he devoted hours of study to this important issue, reflecting on his spiritual teachings, the law, science and the ethical issues presented by stem cell research.

"I believe that human life begins in the womb, not a petri dish or refrigerator," Hatch said.

Hatch said he believes the tragedy is in discarding the embryos instead of using help find cures for the destructive diseases and save lives.

"There is a potential there for a human life, but it will never become a human life until it is planted in the womb," said Christopher Roche, spokesperson for Hatch.

Bennett said the topic has personal importance to him.

"We are close to this issue in our family," said Bennett in a statement issued from his office. "One of our daughters has used in-vitro procedures in an attempt to have additional children."

From his daughter's experience, Bennett said he witnessed that all embryos are not created equal.

"Some are healthy enough to have a chance of survival and some are not," Bennett said.

The doctors who worked with Bennett's daughter knew in advance which embryos were healthy enough to survive, Bennett said.

Sen. Harry Reid, R-Nevada, also a member of the Church of Jesus Christ, said he realizes the gamble involved in embryonic stem cell research.

"There is always the possibility that stem cells will fall short of their expectations, but if we do not allow science to progress, we will have failed to offer hope to all of those suffering from devastating illnesses," Reid said before the Labor/HHS Appropriations Subcommittee.

Reid said he hopes President Bush takes into account the views of individuals, such as former first-lady Nancy Regan who knows what it is like to watch a family member suffer through an incurable disease.

In Oregon, Sen. Gordon Smith, R-Oregon another member of the Church of Jesus Christ, recently testified at a hearing where he read from the Book of Genesis—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostril the breath of life. He argued that "life" requires the presence of the soul.

"If I error on this issue," Smith said, "I want to error on the side of hope and healing and health."

Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, also a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, has not released any public statement, but supports embryonic stem cell research with some reservations.

Culture trays with human embryonic stems cells are stored in heat-controlled storage and studied.

"Significant medical breakthroughs may result from stem cell research," said Susan Wheeler, spokeswoman for Reid

"He doesn't support such research when it involves purposeful destruction of human embryos," Wheeler said. "However, he doesn't condone using federal dollars that fund programs that harvest living embryos totally for the purpose of research."

Although all five senators are devout members of their faith, The Church Jesus Christ has not taken a position on the issue, except to say "it merits cautious scrutiny," and "that strict moral and ethical guidelines be followed," according to an official statement.

President Bush, a Methodist, is dealing with his own internal battle of religious and political beliefs. He said his decision on whether to allow federal funding of the research was made on moral grounds rather than other public opinion.

"This goes way beyond politics," he said. "This is a issue that speaks to morality and science and the juxtaposition of both."

ears, the population of anguage Learners stu- limited English-profi- creased dramatically in School District as well out Utah.

t 1995, we had approx- nine percent of our trict population as Eng- age Learners and now 7 percent," said Julene English as a Second specialist in the Provo ovo district, wants to train more teachers to be endorsed to teach ELL students, Kendell said.

"I think that the majority of districts want to be doing the best that they can, probably the biggest holdback is funding," Kendell said.

At their monthly meeting, The Utah State Board of Education addressed the proposal of the English Language Learners Task Force to fund programs to benefit ELL students.

Nancy Giraldo, alternative language service education specialist for the State Office of Education said the number of ELL students has increased, and funding has remained the same since 1996.

The ELL Task Force asked that $19 million be used to fund programs that will benefit the growing population of ELL students, Giraldo said.

"The proposal for funding is $19 million, out of those $19 million, $13 will be one time, in education what they call one-time is that its not going to be year after year," Giraldo said.

The $13 million is needed to teach all staff about ELL students, Giraldo said.

"It's only to build enough basic expertise so that administrators, superintendents, counselors, secretaries, teachers and all people related to education will have a basic knowledge of English language Learners, so each person can make a contribution and help them," Giraldo said.

The Washington School District in St. George experienced great success by teaching all educators about ELL students, Giraldo said.

"They have proposed and implemented in the last five years successfully with great results the idea of having everybody in schools trained," Giraldo said.

She said the other $6 million, is needed to train personnel and the amount will be needed every year.

"The second part of the request to the board is additional personnel, qualified personnel in the schools, by qualified, we mean for teachers, those who are trained or have an ESL endorsement," Giraldo said.

Giraldo said teaching ELL students is a difficult challenge for educators.

"They come at different times during the year, they are at different levels of proficiency and different levels of education, that's what makes the delivery service more complex to them," Giraldo said.

The funding proposal needs to be approved in the budget for the Utah State Board of Education, the governor and finally by the Utah State Legislature before the program can be implemented, said Patricia Bradley, at-risk services coordinator for the State Office of Education.

Delivery jobs result in money, laughs for students

By Robin Tanner
robin@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

For a group of friends on Friday night ordering a pizza is almost second nature. Especially a pizza that is hand delivered to the doorstep.

Serena Potter, 23, a senior from Guatemala City, majoring in humanities said that it is just easier to stay home.

"Normally I like the pizza delivered because I don't have to leave my house," she said.

The convenience of pizza delivery is what Potter and many other students enjoy.

Unfortunately, some pizza delivery guys do not find convenience or generosity in their job descriptions.

"Some students don't tip at all," Kalum Merrill said.

Merrill, 22, a junior from Orem, majoring in business at UVSC, has delivered Papa John's pizza for four years.

No tips can be pretty disappointing, especially on a Friday night when Merrill delivers close to 70 pizzas.

"One student told me he was too poor to tip and I said that I am poor because of people like him," he said.

Anthony Stubbs agrees that college students tend to be low tippers.

"The worst tippers are usually young couples or college housing."

While going to BYU-Hawaii Stubbs delivered Domino's pizza.

"Girls definitely tip the best," Stubbs said.

Merrill actually encountered a dirty and dangerous side to his job.

"One day I walked out to my car and it was covered in food."

On another evening Merrill got in a fight.

"I got out of my car and this guy pushed me," Merrill said.

Merrill had cut off the man and his wife. The man then followed Merrill back to the store.

"It was just a case of road rage on University Ave," Merrill said.

Mailman Cade Garrett does not have to deal with road rage or even rabid dogs.

"I've just had some loud barking dogs, no real chasing yet," Garrett said.

Garrett, 24, a junior from St. George, majoring in graphic design, has been a mailman for a month.

"I like to drive the truck the most," Garrett said, "and move around and see different parts of town."

Although Garrett said the mail business is busy, he has yet to see someone go "postal."

"It does get pretty stressful sometimes," Garrett said. "We're always trying to meet deadlines and hurry."

The worst experience Garret had so far was dropping a whole handful of mail and getting it all mixed up.

"I had to re-sort everything and it took almost two hours."

Now, if Sam Haught were to drop what he delivers, he would have more than re-sorting to do.

"I work for Oak Plus furniture, the best furniture delivery in town," Haught, 24, a senior from Gilbert, Ariz., majoring in business finance at the U.

"I really like delivering things to people that are excited to get them," Haught said.

His previous employment at an investing company was less enjoyable. The people Haught called were usually not looking forward to his phone calls.

"I had to call people when their money was almost gone and they were not excited to talk to me," Haught said.

Working for Oak Plus is fun because Haught usually delivers a brand new table or couch to a family that has been saving their money for months.

"They are thrilled when we walk through the door," Haught said.

The high-profile, four-day visit of an Egyptian delegation headed by el-Baz, follows an agreement between Presidents Bush and Mubarak that their aides should consult more closely.

El-Baz, who has played a key role in Mideast diplomacy for more than a quarter-century, said observers would deter potential attackers.

"They will think twice," he said. And if they go ahead "they will be caught red-handed."

"I am not saying the administration is doing nothing," he told reporters over bagels and coffee. "But the United States has confined itself to this moment to diplomatic efforts. And the situation has come to a point where you need to have some action."

El-Baz said American observers would run no "real risks" to their safety. He said if the administration declines, Europeans and Canadians could make up the observer force.

In a coordinated move in Cairo, Egyptian Foreign Minister Ahmed Maher said the United States "should have a more active role in making the Israeli government stop its practices and threats and enter into the process of implementing the Mitchell proposals."

These include the suspension of construction at Jewish settlements on the West Bank and Gaza and other recommendations of a panel headed by former Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell.

The position of the United States and Israel is that there must be an extended period of calm before implementing confidence-building measures.

Family secrets revealed, agreement met

Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — For nine years, Alese Reichart tried to live her life as another girl, letting her secret slip only to a few close friends.

She enrolled in school as "Nicole Peters" and pretended to be a year younger than her age to prevent any clues to her location from reaching her father, Michael Reichart.

Alese had been just 5 when her mother, Joli Ann Taylor, took her away from their Illinois home amid a bitter legal battle that left the parents with joint custody. Taylor, on the run with her daughter, settled in Tucson and remarried, and Alese built her own teen-age life there as Nicole.

Then, late last year, their fragile life in hiding fell apart.

A classmate recognized pictures of Alese and her mother on a missing children advertisement. Their principal called authorities, and FBI agents showed up at the middle school in December and took Alese back to Chicago.

This week, after eight months in Chicago foster care, Alese learned her parents' lawyers had reached an agreement to return her to her friends and stepfather in Tucson. And on Wednesday, for the first time in nearly a decade, Alese Reichart, 15, was able to use her real name and age openly in the community she considers home.

"It means everything," she told the Chicago Sun Times earlier this week. "It means the world. I get my life back - my life that's been put on pause for eight months. I'm going to be with all my friends. I'm going to go to the mall. I might go to the mountains."

While the agreement, approved by a judge, allowed her to return to Tucson, her life will be different.

Her mother has to remain in Illinois to face child abduction charges filed against her in 1991, though she is free on bond. And after 10 years apart, Alese will be spending vacations with her father, who has had sole legal custody of her since 1994.

While she was in the foster home and in a Chicago group home for troubled youths, her parents had only supervised visits with her, said Taylor's lawyer, Nancy Donlon.

"She desperately missed her close friends," said Jeannie Walsh, the girl's foster mother.

Walsh said the teen-ager had some trouble making friends because she didn't know when she would be moved again, but she graduated from eighth grade there and even worked at a local park.

At home in Tucson, Alese was known as a creative girl with an infectious laugh who could suddenly swing into dark moods. She was in and out of therapy - at least partly dealing with her mother's claims that her father sexually abused her, according to court documents filed in May by the Cook County, Ill., public guardian.

According to those documents, three complaints Taylor made alleging her daughter was sexually abused were dismissed by the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services as unfounded. In 1991, Michael Reichart was arrested by Chicago police and held for several hours, but he was released without being charged.

The same year, Taylor took her daughter to two different hospitals and complained the girl had been abused, but neither hospital found enough evidence to establish that there had been sexual abuse, an official at Cook County Children's Hospital said.

Years later, a therapist in Arizona said Alese Reichart couldn't recall being molested.

Part of the agreement granting her stepfather, Dan Peters, temporary custody requires Alese to continue with therapy to help her adjust.

Initially, reconciling father and daughter after a decade apart wasn't easy, but their relationship has become "very comfortable, loving," said Alese's lawyer, David Pasulka.

He said their first scheduled vacation visit is in October. Michael Reichart didn't return phone calls seeking comment.

Taylor, who has been advised by her lawyers not to speak to the media, hopes to join her daughter and husband soon, Donlon said.

"People close to them knew, but it was shocking that the law could split mother and daughter like that," said Diana Beach, whose daughter Stephanie, 14, is friends with Alese.

On Wednesday, the two friends were reunited at Beach's Tucson home.

"She's happy to be back," Stephanie said, though she said Alese didn't want to speak with the media so soon after returning home.

"Her life has been on hold for nine months," Diana Beach said. "We're glad they can live a normal life, finally."

Neighborhood watch volunteers remain stalwart despite risks

By Melanie Williams
melanie@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Mobile watch volunteers are still willing to patrol their neighborhoods, despite some personal risk to themselves, said volunteers.

"That personal danger is comparatively remote and my first reason to participate in this program is to protect the neighborhood that I live in and where our children were raised and maybe our grandchildren will be," said Lori Reynolds, a trainee for the mobile watch program in the Joaquin neighborhood.

She said although things can happen that might place her at risk, her role is to inform the police of what is happening.

"We're not there to play police in any way," Reynolds said. "We're just a watchful eye – that's why we're called mobile watch and not anything else."

Reynolds said she and her husband decided to participate in the mobile watch program after some members of her church approached their family about participating.

"We feel we have a little extra time and so that's what got us to participate in this mobile watch program," she said.

Joel Touchet, 21, a freshman majoring in music education from San Diego, said he is volunteering because he is civic minded.

"I wanted to help out my community and I wanted it to be a safe place for people to be," Touchet said. "There's a lot of things that happen around here and I have a sister who lives here and I wanted the community to be safe."

Touchet said he wanted Provo to be a good environment to raise children, a place where he wants to live and be able to walk outside without worrying about getting shot.

"Happy valley is still happy valley, but it's getting less and less happy," Touchet said. "There's still a lot of things that happen here and I want to be able to try and prevent them."

Touchet has completed half of the required training mobile watch members receive.

Michael Kennard, the mobile watch coordinator for the Joaquin neighborhood, has completed all of the required training and has been out on several watches. He said the program seemed daunting when he first found out about the rigorous training program volunteers must complete.

"I thought, 'How am I going to sell this to the neighborhood?'" he said.

Getting people to complete the training has not been a problem though, Kennard said. He said people kept going to the training because they had fun participating.

Kennard became involved in the mobile watch program because he was concerned about what was happening in his neighborhood. He said people were running through his backyard, stealing bicycles, breaking car windows, egging cars, and there was a gang stabbing and a hit and run incident.

"All of this stuff was happening and it just seemed like it was getting worse and worse and we were hearing more and more things going on and it seemed like somebody needed to do something to turn that around," Kennard said.

Y groups apply to perform at Olympics

By Jon Madsen
madsen@newsroom.byu.edu

United Concerts and BYU are in the initial stages of picking performers for Salt Lake City's Olympic downtown festival next February.

On August 1st United Concerts, under contract from Salt Lake City, began taking applications for performers. According to David McKay, vice-president of United Concerts, they will begin a review committee of the applications so far on September 3rd and finish the program schedule by the beginning of November.

"They can be anybody, anybody who wants to play," McKay said.

This opportunity has caught the eye of some of the performing talents of BYU. "They all know about it. They're all excited," said Shane Wright, BYU coordinator of regional performances.

BYU isn't planning on being limited to just Salt Lake's downtown festival. "We're going to go through as many places as possible. We want our groups everywhere," Wright said speaking of the University's Olympic agenda.

Wright said they're not sure which performance groups would go to the downtown festival. Seventeen performing groups are under Wright's coordination.

"Those are going to be our smaller groups, because the stages are pretty small," he said. McKay said United Concerts will have six stages for the Olympic festival, with the largest one being 32 feet by 28 feet.

Although Wright said he is unsure of who will represent BYU at the festival, he did say that the Folk Music Ensemble and Jazz Legacy would probably be two groups that would attend the downtown festival. Wright also said that time is another factor. The festival will probably have rock bands at night, so the BYU groups would probably have to play in the afternoon.

Because of the early stages of the organization, several aspects such as performance runtimes are still in question.

"Those are all things open to discussion. Probably about 45 minutes or an hour at the most," McKay said.

The two-month review process will mostly go over the talent logistics. "What works, what doesn't work, how big, if it's a duo they probably wouldn't on the big stage, they'd be on smaller stage—you know, lo tics," McKay said.

> "They can be anybody, anybody who wants t play."

There will even be a fr speech area.

"If they're into offensive guage, if they're into offens subject material, then they p ably should be trying to get the free-speech stage," McK said.

The city seems to be planni on a festival filled with divers "It will go from very professi al to school children," said J Sittner, Salt Lake City Olym planning director. Sittner said main draw for performers to unteer would be to be a par the Olympic excitement.

Stews call for rabbits of standard quality

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Not just any rabbit will do for stew, says the government.

After tinkering with the size of holes in Swiss cheese, the Agriculture Department now wants to set standards for old rabbits that are sold for stew meat.

"The industry asked for it, basically," said Jessica Faust, a spokeswoman for the Agriculture Department's Agricultural Marketing Service. She noted that the standards would be voluntary and that the industry reimburses the department for the cost of grading the quality of the meat.

The department already has standards for younger rabbits.

It also sets standards for fruits, vegetables and a variety of meat and poultry, including geese, ducks and pigeons. Pigeons? "Go figure," said Faust.

The standards are used throughout the food industry to ensure consistency and determine pricing. Products that meet the standards can bear a special USDA seal or stamp.

Earlier this year, the department decided that Grade A Swiss cheese could have smaller holes to keep it from getting tangled in high-speed slicing machines.

The department's rabbit rules would add "stewer" rabbits to its standards for "roaster and mature" rabbits, classified as six months of age or older. Younger rabbits are classified as "fryers."

"This change is consistent with actual rabbit grower and breeding terminology," the department explained.

The government's rabbit standards cover the quantity and quality of meat and include rules about how many cuts, tears and other defects it can have.

ducation Week to give church members spiritual strength ir Education Week will commemorate Brigham Young.

By Diana Lee
diana@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will come from all over the world to BYU for Campus Education Week.

"In addition to having members from each state, we will have individuals from 10 to 12 countries attending," said Neal Carlile, director of Campus Education Week.

Campus Education Week started in 1922 and is in its 79th year.

It is one of the oldest church educational programs held today. Once called Leadership Week, it was changed in 1962 to Education Week to include a wider audience.

Carlile said that in 1922, only 2,000 people attended. The attendance exceeded 5,000 in 1971, and over 25,000 will be present this year.

The program hosted by BYU and the Church Education System is to help individuals foster spiritual renewal, intellectual growth, character development, and life-long learning and service.

"I believe a lot of people enjoy returning to a campus, or just being on campus where there's a learning atmosphere," said Bruce Payne, program administrator for Campus Education Week.

To honor Brigham Young's 200th anniversary, this year's theme is, "Brigham Young: An Example of Faith and Service."

"President Brigham Young lived a remarkable life. Underlying all of his accomplishments as a convert, Apostle, President of the Quorum of the Twelve, Church President, pioneer exodus leader, governor, business leader, settlement genius and educational founder was his faith in Jesus Christ and his service to God and mankind," Carlile said.

A variety of classes on family, finance, music, gospel, marriage, self-improvement, youth-interest and many other topics will be offered.

In addition to the daily classes, Campus Education Week will feature a keynote devotional address by President James E. Faust, Second Counselor in the First Presidency of The Church, on Tuesday at 11 a.m. in the Marriott Center. The devotional is open to the general public.

Some other highlights of the weeklong program will be nightly performances of "Here's Brother Brigham," "The Scarlet Pimpernel," and James Oneil Miner in Concert in the Harris Fine Arts Center.

"We hope they will come away with a few principles that can help enrich both their lives and others they come in contact with," said Payne.

Education Week is open to the public. Individuals can pre-register through the 18th, or register any day at the program.

A post highlight that guests have been invited to is a BYU football game against Tulane on the 25, to kick off the season. Tickets will be available for purchase at a discount.

Student graduates after 30 years at BYU

Provo resident wears cap and gown for kids

By Amber Oaks Coe
aoc3@email.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

After Provo resident Barbara Hammond, graduated with a BA in communications studies last December, she debated about wanting to wear a cap and gown.

Despite feelings that convocation might be anticlimactic after 29 years of work, Hammond chose to walk this last Friday. "I wanted my kids to see me march," she said. Hammond also promised her five children that she would attend all of their graduations.

Hammond's freshman year began in 1971 here at BYU. After receiving an associate degree in business, she began working for KBYU-FM radio. Three years later, Hammond transitioned to KBYU-TV, where she worked for 12 years.

Hammond held a large variety of positions at the station before departing as the assistant station manager after her second child was born.

Since then, Hammond has chipped away at a formal degree slowly but surely. When Hammond found she had less than 30 credits remaining to complete her degree, she chose to take more classes at once. After observing she could manage three classes and her role as a mother and wife, Hammond set out to finish. "I've been doing it one step at a time," Hammond said.

Attending BYU as a parent and veteran television professional gave Hammond a different perspective than most students. "I felt like everyone's mom," she said.

Hammond remembered many past technologies and events her fellow students did not. "The historical aspect was interesting," she said. "I was in fourth grade when President Kennedy was shot; to most students, that event is just history." Hammond said she enjoyed being around younger students. "They brought energy with them," she said.

While Hammond admits attending college and being a full-time wife and mother has involved some juggling, she didn't forget her priorities. "My husband and kids come first," she said.

This is one reason her bachelor's degree took a back seat over the years. Hammond cheered her husband on through masters and doctorate programs, and is the mother of five children, ages ranging from 3 to 16.

"I had to plan my time carefully," Hammond said. "I would try to schedule my classes during the time my children were in school." Hammond did most of her homework at home to boost her availability to her family.

Hammond said many of her friends have returned to college seeking either their bachelor's of master's degrees. Hammond is encouraged by the women she knows who are now working toward advanced degrees.

Hammond said she recognizes the specific nature of choosing to work toward a degree. "I've realized it's an individual decision. I would never pressure anyone to return to school." Hammond cites the factors of children's temperaments, life circumstances, family structure, and personal determination as contributing to the decision to obtain higher education.

She said she is committed to life-long learning, and opposes growing stagnant.

She is proud her children have seen her and her husband working toward and completing higher education. "I see learning as life-long," Hammond said. She hopes her children will embrace a love of education. "We're trying to raise our children in that atmosphere," Hammond said.

Hammond said knowing she can always learn and grow gives her optimism as a mother. "Learning comes from all areas," she said. "Parenting is the most humbling experience. It is hopeful to me that I'm not limited to the tools I have now to teach my children."

Hammond plans to continue her studies in communications with graduate classes this fall semester. "I'm looking at a master's degree now," Hammond said. "It's like I do everything backwards. I went to college, had a television career, was married, had a family, and then went back for a degree."

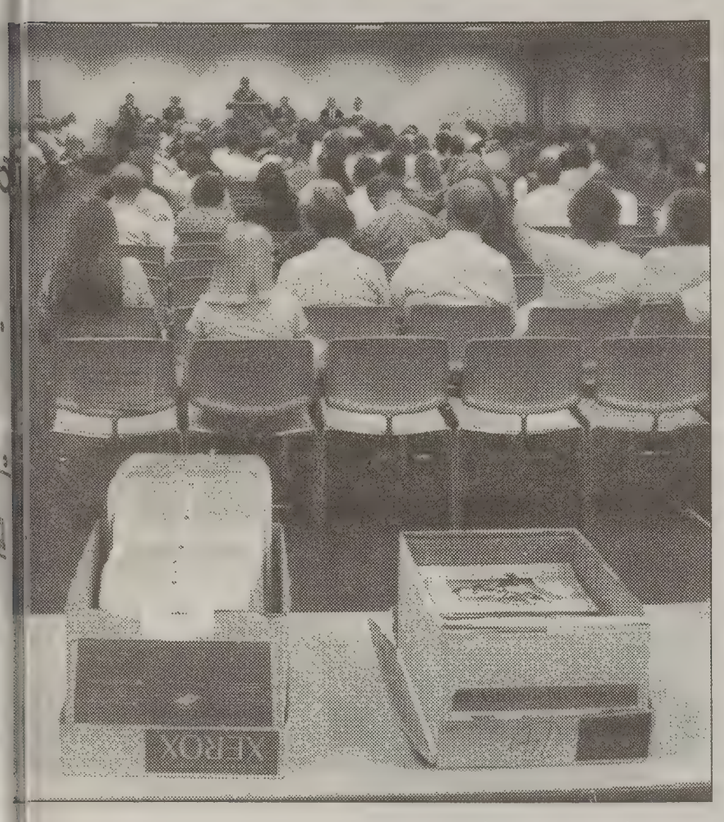
ocal volunteers indispensable to Education Week



Christijan Draper/Universe

n Week volunteers train for their work this week.

By Carol-Lyn Jardine
jardine@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Provo resident Janet Gale will be checking for dress and grooming standards, conducting crowd and line control and answering questions this week. But, Gale is not a security guard or even an employee of BYU.

She is one of the indispensable volunteers the Education Week coordinators count on to stage the annual event that brings nearly 25,000 visitors to campus.

"We literally could not do this without them. They're our hands, our legs, our feet and our ears," said Lori Lee, program assistant for Campus Education Week.

Lee and her counterpart, Karen Spangler, organized the volunteer effort. Lee and Spangler recruit, schedule and hold an orientation meeting for the volunteers.

Volunteers must be at least 18 years old, and are asked to volunteer 15 to 16 service hours throughout Education Week, Lee said.

She said volunteers are asked to perform many different functions, such as directing over-flow seating, counting attendance, helping instructors with hand-outs and arranging for prayers.

The only training the volunteers receive is a two-hour crash course the Saturday before Education Week begins.

"It's a miracle every year that with only a short orientation they serve us so well," said Neil Carlile, director of campus Education Week.

Gale has been volunteering for Education Week for more than ten years. She said the best part of volunteering is meeting all the people.

"It's so fun to meet people from all over and being able to help them and let them know how exciting it is to come to Education Week," Gale said.

One experience of helping a woman with disabilities was rewarding for Gale.

"She was so sweet and so grateful for the help we gave her," Gale said.

She said it is important to make the people feel welcome.

"You try to make each one of them feel special, important and not just one of the crowd," Gale said.

Lee said that one quality volunteers need to have is being able to think and act quickly.

Gale found that to be true when a woman attending a class had a heart attack.

"It was such a frightening experience," Gale said.

The hosting staff called the paramedics, the woman was stabilized and taken to the hospital.

Gale said she called to check up on the woman, and the woman said she was all right and wanted to come back.

Volunteers like Gale are essential to the success of Education Week, Carlile said.

He said approximately 500 to 600 people volunteer each year, making the ratio about 41 attendees for every volunteer.

On top of the experiences volunteers have, they receive their Education Week passes at no charge.

Young pianist works toward fulfilling dreams

By Jared Johnson
jared@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

> "If you work at something that's not work, but total enjoyment, that's the best."
> — David SylvesterSr., Sylvester's father

While most musicians spend a great amount of time piecing their careers together, David Sylvester, II has an enviable head start.

A 16-year-old member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saint living in DeSoto, Missouri, Sylvester has been turning heads with his solo piano compositions since he was 12.

"It's a total blast. It's like living a dream," Sylvester said.

That dream is to compose and perform on the piano for a living after college and a full-time mission.

The youth started playing the piano at age 4. For his 12th birthday, his father gave him two Jim Brickman CDs. Those albums opened up the world of modern piano to him.

Since then, Sylvester has two albums to his credit and a third planned for release around Christmas. He has had his share of breaks in the music business, from becoming a regular act at the Arlington Hotel in St. Louis to getting distributed in bookstores by Heartrise Music to meeting his idol Jim Brickman during a concert.

"Jim gave me some tips since he's been down the road already," Sylvester said.

Sylvester's first album "My Turn" is listed on Brickman's Web site as a "Brick's Pick," a section of the piano star's favorite CDs, books and movies. Sylvester's second CD, "Live at the Sheldon," captured an entire concert complete with his comments between songs.

His solo piano style can be hard to describe, he said; he compared it to Brickman, who dubs his own music "romantic piano" instead of new age.

The youth has already found missionary opportunities by mentioning his beliefs to local reporters and peers when they ask about his music. He continues to compose and perform in hopes of paying for his mission and eventually leading to a full-time music career.

"I'm not big and famous, so I haven't got a public-eye life," Sylvester said. "I'm a teenager. I go around with my friends, then on weekends I get to do things like concerts and appearances. It's the best of both worlds."

"It's pure enjoyment," said David Sylvester Sr., the pianist's father. "If you work at something that's not work, but total enjoyment, that's the best. For David, it's not work to sit down and have people ask him to play."

Joanna Caldwell/Universe

Sixteen-year-old David Sylvester II is making a name for himself performing and composing piano pieces. He said he hopes to have a full-time career in music after serving a mission.

sand classes. Twenty- nd people. It must be Week again.
e's Education Week ter than ever before to mmodate the growing people wishing to Neil Carlile, Educa- irector.
1,000 classes focus- gion, family, business, music and education will be offered during all parts of the day to allow patrons a variety of choices.

"We feel like we have some of the finest teachers at Brigham Young University and the Church Education System, and some very fine teachers from outside of those two institutions," Carlile said.

This year's theme, "Brigham Young — an example of faith and service," was chosen to assist the university in commemorating the 200th anniversary of Brigham Young's birth, Carlile said.

One of this year's most notable speakers in President James E. Faust, first counselor in the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said Bruce Payne, Education Week program coordinator. Speakers who draw the most attention will be in the Marriott Center, the de Jong Concert Hall, and in the ballrooms in the Wilkinson Student Center, he said.

Some of the religion classes feature inspirational topics, scriptural topics, prophet biographies and temple marriage. Family topics include personal histories, death, parenting, financial management and gifted children. Some business classes will focus on income taxes and stock market investing. Music classes will feature hymns and refinement of the senses. Education classes will include literacy and public speaking, according to the Education Week program.

A separate track will be specifically devoted to the 4,000-5,000 youth that are expected to attend.

Carlile said people normally come to campus to attend Education Week from all 50 states and from 10 to 12 foreign countries.

"We feel like with the 1,000 classes that there probably isn't a class that people wouldn't enjoy," Carlile said.

"This program is one of the great educational resources for members in Utah County and other nearby areas. Whether you come for the 1,000 classes, the 200 faculty, the devotional with President James E. Faust, the 70+ youth classes or the youth dance, this is a wonderful opportunity," according to an Education Week press release.

More information about Education Week can be found on the Internet at ce.byu.edu/ed/edweek/index.html . Patrons can still register any day during Education Week on campus.

Twenty-five thousand people come from all around to enjoy Education Week, and only 3,000 of them stay in on-campus housing.

Campus Education Week Program Administrator Bruce Payne said officials have been able to satisfy almost everyone.

"Everybody that applied clear up through the middle of July was able to receive housing except for some of the people that applied for family housing," Payne said. "There just aren't enough family units at BYU to accommodate."

Valerie Rampton from Alaska said it's quite a privilege to be able to stay in family housing on campus.

"That kind-of determines whether we come down or not, if we can get the housing," she said. "It really is a privilege, and it really simplifies things for us."

"It's almost like walking on temple grounds," she said. "There's just a good feeling there."

Marks said her office sends out applications for on-campus housing a year in advance but the meal plans can be purchased at the registration window of the Morris Center.

SAS Conference Services offers two meal plans — a signature card with a $50 limit or a meal ticket at the Morris Center and Cannon Center for two meals a day.

Marks said that approximately 10 to 15 percent of the 25,000 people that come to Education Week purchase one of the two meal plans.

Joy Mann, along with her husband and three sons, is coming for her third year to stay in Richards Hall in Heritage Halls and has the two-meals-a-day plan.

"That's the one we always get because the food is so good at the Cannon Center and Morris Center," Mann said.

BYU Studies to promote new book during week

By Kristal Williams
kristal@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Those who treasure the stories of their pioneer past will be adding a new book to their library, and may even discover a new ancestor in the process.

This Education Week 2001 welcomes the launch of, "A Trial Furnace," the first book focusing solely on the success, sacrifice and struggles of the pioneers sent to Parowan and Cedar City, Iron County, to establish an iron manufacturing company.

"Thousands of people living in southern Utah are descended from the iron missionaries," said Kathryn H. Shirts, co-author of the book. "Many of them will find the names and stories of their ancestors in the book."

Heather M. Seferovich, associate editor for the Smith Institute Series with BYU Studies explained that establishing an iron-works was not an easy task for the settlers. With no suppliers of raw materials that that came to the Far West, the pioneers had to find their own.

"It was probably one of the most technical operations to be undertaken in the 19th century," Seferovich said. "They had to succeed against many struggles — drought, bug infestations, natural disasters and fuel supply problems — all in addition to operating the iron-works."

"A Trial Furnace," draws from the individual journals and personal writings of the settlers.

John W. Welch, publication director for the Smith Institute said the book brings to life the rich heritage of people in southern Utah.

"People will pick up the book and find personal connection to a particular story or person," Welch said. "There has never been a book like it."

Research on "A Trial Furnace" began 30 years ago with Morris Shirts and was finished by his daughter-in-law after he died in 1997.

"Furnace" is released this year to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the founding of Cedar City and Parowan, both in Iron County.

Kathryn Shirts, who has a bachelor's degree in history from Stanford, said that the book is an important part of Utah heritage for both historians and members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Kathryn H. Shirts is a co-author of BYU Studies' most recent book, "A Trial Furnace," which will be launched during Education Week.

Renowned psychologist to teach class at Education Week

By Peter Richards
peter@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

One of the leading psychologists in Utah will present a class series as part of this year's Campus Education Week.

Rick Hawlks, chief psychologist for Weber Human Services, a comprehensive community mental health center, specializes in helping members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints overcome social emotional problems.

"He always has tried to help people with different kinds of problems, addictions mostly," said his wife, Karla Hawlks.

Rick Hawlks has been an instructor at BYU Education Week since 1986 with the exception of two years, said H. Bruce Payne, coordinator of Education Week.

He has applied the gospel principles in the treatment of his patients that are members of the Church of Jesus Christ, Karen Hawlks said.

Rick Hawlks has worked with many people during the 23 years he has worked at Weber Human Services.

The families he works with are often very active in the church, he said.

He said he has seen someone in church on Sunday and then again later in the week after they had murdered someone.

He said often members of the Church of Jesus Christ believe a myth.

"The myth is that living the gospel and being active in the church will prevent bad things from happening to me," he said. "The gospel brings the tools, the resources to deal with bad things when they happen. It does not eliminate them."

After bad things happen, many members of the Church of Jesus Christ outside the intermountain west don't know where to turn, he said.

As part of addressing this concern he has been instrumental in developing an organization, ldsmentalhealth.org. This volunteer group works to bring resources based on church teachings to members of the Church of Jesus Christ over the Internet.

Rick Hawlks is teaching the first class dealing with same sex attractions ever offered at Education Week, Payne said.

"This year we thought that it might be beneficial to have such a class," Payne said. But he stresses the class is not a substitute for ecclesiastical direction.

Payne said this is the reas topic has not been deali before at Education Week.

Karla Hawlks attends all classes her husband teaches.

She said unlike other tea he does not teach a ligh humorous class.

"It's really informative (Rick) doesn't sugarcoa thing, and he's not the entertaining. He's there people know the informatio that there is help out there said.

We are
NewsNet

Who is NewsNet?

We are!

We are the men and women of BYU NewsNet, BYU's number one source of information.

We are The Daily Universe, BYU's Newspaper for almost 50 years. We are KBYU TV and Radio News, training ground for the broadcast journalists of the future. We are NewsNet.byu.edu, BYU's award-winning Internet news and information site.

We are all of these things, and more, for NewsNet is also the future of journalism in the world. As a laboratory newsroom for BYU's Department of Communications, NewsNet combines traditional print and broadcast disciplines, and then merges in the exciting Internet disciplines of the future, to give you a one-stop information source for the new millennium.

You can be part of our NewsNet family too, by dropping in to our website, picking up our newspaper, or watching or listening to our broadcasts, either on KBYU, or on the World Wide Web.
